Tight Suspension + Solid Steering = Safety!

Good steering and suspension qualities are important in any vehicle. Unfortunately, those good qualities diminish as the vehicle grows older. As a result, many cars develop loose, sloppy steering and unsafe front and wheel action—which might contribute to a loss of control. So play it safe—check all steering and suspension parts for wear and replacement if necessary. We carry only the finest quality tie rod ends, ball joints, bushings, wheel bearings and more for most vehicles. Come in and see for yourself!

As goes Panama...

THE PENTAGON has never been known for honesty. And when the generals and admirals are caught in a lie, they tend to act by scrambling to cover it up. Jonathan Franklin's story, on page 29, is a classic case point.

According to official reports, and what the Pentagon told us, only 23 U.S. soldiers died in the invasion of Panama. But when you ask the soldiers stationed in Panama City, who participated in the invasion, they all seem to have a very different story.

Numerous officers and enlisted men told Franklin the same grisly tale: At least 60 U.S. soldiers died in the invasion, maybe more. Many were apparently killed by "friendly fire" — that is, by their own troops, mistakenly taking them for the enemy.

One soldier described the horrible job of scrubbing down the bloody bodies, which had been brought to the Howard Air Force base bowling alley, the only place in the area with air conditioning powerful enough to keep the bodies from decomposing. "I personally counted 67 bodies," he said. That's almost three times the number the Pentagon acknowledges were killed in the invasion.

If what the soldiers told Franklin is true, it's an outrage. The single most important information that comes out of any war is the name, rank and serial number of every soldier killed in action. Every dead soldier is another reminder of the basic question that the public has the right and duty to ask: Was this something worth dying for?

With vast numbers of U.S. troops now in the Middle East and all-out war just a few stray gunshots or diplomatic miscues away, the Panama body count becomes all the more important. Before another 23, or 60, or 67 or 50,000 U.S. troops are killed in the desert, Congress needs to call the Pentagon to task, and force the generals and admirals to tell the public the truth.

The 'progressive slate'

THE FALL campaign is in full swing and as the traditionally liberal San Francisco political clubs and organizations announce their endorsements, something of a "progressive slate" is beginning to emerge.

On numerous endorsement lists, from Local 790 to the District 8 Democratic Club, from the Alice B. Toklas Lesbian Gay Democratic Club to the Bernal Heights Democratic Club, the same five names keep appearing on endorsement lists: Roberta Achtenberg, Jose Medina, Carole Migden, Kevin Shelley and Doris Ward.

But with a couple of notable exceptions, none of those "progressive" leaders have offered anything resembling leadership on the most important issue facing the city. And the "progressive" clubs and organizations have allowed the candidates to get away with it. The issue is simple, and it ought to be at the heart of everything that any candidate says about the future of this city: Where is San Francisco going to find another $100 million a year to cover the city's growing social needs at a time of shrinking state and federal support?

The candidates who have been down to the Guardian office for endorsement interviews or have answered our written questions on the topic, have, for the most part, talked in general terms and given piecemeal answers. We need to cut some waste here, trim some costs there, pick up a few more bucks from taxing movie tickets or raising parking fees.

Some political clubs in town have asked candidates general questions about whether and how they would raise new revenues, but none that we know of have put out serious, specific proposals and asked whether the candidates would support them.

This isn't an abstract, philosophical, are-you-for-or-against-raising-taxes issue. It's as real as the 6,000 San Franciscans who are infected with AIDS but have no health insurance and have to rely on the city to provide them with the drugs and medical care that is their only hope of staying alive. (The cost of giving those 6,000 San Franciscans a chance to live: as much as $30 million a year.)

It's as real as the hundreds of homeless people who rely on the city for their physical and mental health care and who would like to be able to rely on the city for places to live. (The number of San Franciscans who died on the streets, for lack of shelter, in 1989, according to the Tenderloin Times: 110. The amount the state cut from San Francisco's public health budget this year: $13 million.)

It's as real as the crowded buses that come less often, and the crime victims who can't find a cop when they need one, and the students who can't get to a city library that has to close early.

We expect the Bill Mahers and the Jim Lazaruses to take the downtown no-new-taxes, lean-mean-government line. But candidates who want to be part of a "progressive slate" need to do a whole lot better.

Unfortunately, only one of the five "slate" members, Roberta Achtenberg, seems serious about proposing ideas for revenue generation (she's called for a special task force to overhaul local tax policy).

Not a one of the five so-called "progressives" was willing to come out against the mayor's Mission Bay plan, which will cost the city some $300 million over the next 30 years and is full of serious problems (see Bay Guardian, 9/5/90).

And what about the obvious, well-documented revenue-generating proposals that we've reported on and outlined repeatedly during the campaign? What about a feasibility study on municipalizing PG&E (and bringing the city at least $165 million in new money every year)? What about a progressive business tax? What about higher franchise fees on PG&E, Viacom, Pacific Bell and other big businesses that use city property?

The progressive clubs and organizations have essentially ignored these issues, and so have many of the candidates.

Of the five candidates who have gotten so many "progressive" endorsements, only Actenberg and Migden were willing to support without reservation a feasibility study. Ward and Shelley only said they would do so if the city could afford the price (probably a one-time outlay of about $200,000). That's exactly what PG&E and its supporters say every time the issue comes up — we can't afford it, not this year (and by implication, not ever).

If this is what makes for a "progressive" slate, San Francisco is in serious trouble. And if this is the way the city's grassroots political groups are going about choosing candidates, the prospect for change isn't terribly promising.

LETTERS

All the news that's fit to...

Judging from the content of his letters, a more accurate and descriptive name for Dean Leshner's company, Leshner Communications, Inc., would be Leshner Intimidation and Propaganda, Inc. (see Bay Guardian, 9/12/90). Citizen Dean's threats against the Sierra Club, Audubon Society and Greenbelt Alliance to "pursue legal actions...to the bitter end," and his subterfuge in saying that he represents "1,100 and not 4,000" lots for development are characteristic of the developers who dismantled California's mass transit system in the 1950s and overdeveloped San Francisco in the 1980s — all for profit and without regard for the community.

Leshner uses the "American way of life" and the primacy of the "marketplace" as excuses to justify his lack of responsibility to the community and his lack of conscience as a newspaper publisher. Although he owns a chain of newspapers "that is by far the most dominant news outlet in Contra Costa County," Leshner apparently considers some public information "private privileged communication" when it has to do with his dealings as a large-scale developer.

Keep those letters coming. They help the people of the Bay Area know what kind of publisher-developer is in their midst. For the health of the community, the citizenry needs to be informed.

Hidden problems with Walden

Thank you for trashing the Diamond District of Oakland and its residents (see "The war on drug rehab," Bay Guardian, 8/29/90) on behalf of Walden House. Here are a few of the hidden problems with the Walden House proposal:

1) Within a two-mile radius of the proposed site, this neighborhood presently supports the greatest number of treatment centers in Oakland, including drug rehabs, hospitals, psychiatric centers, locked facilities, and teenage and child-treatment programs. What's wrong with other neighborhoods? Is there something extra therapeutic about the Diamond District?

2) Kids run away from treatment programs. Walden House has a very high turnover rate. Many of these kids live in distant cities. Where do they run to? If a kid leaves, they won't take him back. What burdens will this place on Oakland's social services?

3) The neighborhood suggested Walden House indemnify the neighbors against damage done by residents and staff. Walden flatly refused. Shows a lot of confidence in their product, doesn't it?

4) People forget that Walden House is a money-making business. They planned to treat 100-plus teenagers at $3,978 per month each. That's a projected monthly gross of about a half-million dollars. By contrast, the rent for that facility was only $18,000 a month. This program was going to be a hell of a cash cow for somebody. The kids of Oakland?

5) We acknowledge that Oakland is, to borrow Chester Stern's pithy phrase, "a fucking mess" of drug abuse. But is Walden House the solution? How effective are they? What's their success rate? Does their contribution exceed that of the other 54 programs in the area?

6) Stern also trashes the mayor and the City Council for representing the interests of Oakland residents. Isn't that their job? Better they should represent the entrepreneurial interests of a San Francisco-based business like Walden House?

7) There was never enough room in the proposed facility to treat up to 125 kids. The grounds are almost nonexistent. Walden planned to make use of a tiny community park behind the facility. If Stern truly wants "to give addicts a chance to get out and enjoy the fresh air," this is not the place.

8) Besides, these kids would not all be from Oakland. Their San Francisco facility takes kids from all over the state, provided their local social-service agency will foot the bill. At the time of their application, Walden House in San Francisco had 43 teenagers, of whom four were from San Francisco.

9) The proposed facility wouldn't have been confined to drug users. They would have accepted the full range of disturbed adolescents, including psychiatric patients. We know local facilities like Galdman Hospital and Fred Finch Youth Center can handle such adolescents. But can Walden House?

Move the Embarcadero

THERE'S SOMETHING about the Embarcadero Freeway that seems to bring out the worst in everyone. It's a symbol of everything that is wrong with public policy and planning in San Francisco. All you had to do was listen to the supervisors debate for five minutes this week to reach the depressing conclusion that the city is being run by delirious fools. (It's a wonder they don't spend all their time debating what size legal paper to use.)

The issue is simple: The city badly needs a coherent waterfront plan. The city badly needs a coherent transportation plan. The city badly needs a coherent economic-development plan. The city badly needs a coherent plan for balancing its budget and paying for infrastructure improvements in the short and long term.

Demolition and replacement of the Embarcadero Freeway would fit nicely into those plans, if they existed. Since they don't, demolition fits nicely into nothing, is completely out of context and, the way things tend to work in this city, is bound to create more of a mess than we already have.

Instead of demolishing the thing, I say we move it, piece by piece, to the front of City Hall, right by the mayor's window, where it can stand as a giant monument to the lack of foresight and community planning that seems to be a permanent part of the political landscape.

And so much for that.

The only thing more depressing than watching the current supervisors in action is talking to the folks who would like to replace them. As we note in an editorial on page 6, most of the candidates who keep getting all the endorsements from "progressive" groups have alarmingly little in the way of a real progressive agenda. They all seem to support Mission Bay. Only a couple of them have any real concept of what it's going to take to balance the city's budget without cutting needed services over the next five years. Everyone talks about piecemeal solutions. All the issues exist in isolation.

Interviewing most of these candidates is like watching the TV news: There is no yesterday, no tomorrow, and everybody smiles.

ON A VERY different note: This is campaign-fundraiser season, and every politician in the universe is trying to get you to cough up $50 or $125 or $5,000 for a limp chicken dinner and a boring speech. Not me. I'm plugging an honest cause — the salvation of my favorite neighborhood bar.

The Jay 'n Bee, on 20th and York, is having trouble with the bill collectors, the tax collectors and PG&E (the bastards want blood). Since it's the only place I can ever get any work done, I can't imagine letting it close down. Saturday, Sept. 29th, we're having a fundraiser to Save the Jay 'n Bee from PG&E and the Mayor's Small Business Tax. Starts in the early afternoon at the Jay 'n Bee. Steaks and beer $20. See Jim Balderston in his natural element. Don't miss it.

A GROUP of Contra Costa County residents is mounting a growing campaign to prevent a toxic-waste processor from expanding its operations on Martinez's north shore.

Fearing the leak of poisonous fumes from the giant processor, more than 200 county residents have joined Communities for a Safe Environment, demanding that the Martinez City Council reject Rhone Poulenc's request to enlarge the capacities of its toxic-waste incinerator.

The French corporation maintains an incinerator about 100 yards from the Benicia Bridge, converting vaporized sulphuric sludge into sulphuric acid, which Rhone Poulenc sells for chemical reuse.

If the City Council allows the company to treat and refine more than just sulphuric sludge, say residents, the risks of serious environmental accidents will increase.

"You have a high-pressure environment with lots of chemicals floating around in the plant," group spokesperson Wayne Rudiger told the Bay Guardian. "And they do escape." If a major leak did occur, said Rudiger, the plant's proximity to Martinez would place residents at risk of poisoning. "Rush hour. Four o'clock on a work day. It's a parking lot out there. It's a trap anywhere you go."

In addition, said Rudiger, the more trucks carrying toxics along highways into Martinez, the greater the chances of a chemical spill. Similarly, a leak at the plant could contaminate the Suisun Bay and poison marine life, say members of Communities for a Safe Environment.

Rhone Poulenc administrators say they know about local residents' concerns, but that the residents are overreacting. "The plant meets and exceeds the capacity to be an incinerator for toxic waste," in accord with the Environmental Protection Agency and the California Department of Health Services, said Rick Fahler, the company's West Coast environmental manager.

"People see toxic waste as being ultra-different from other chemicals," Fahler told the Bay Guardian. "But I defy anyone to tell me what's hazardous about [toxic] waste that isn't also hazardous with gasoline."

Responding to residents' charges that new chemicals on the road would heighten the chances of a deadly highway spill, company spokesperson John Wood said massing chemicals in the Martinez incinerator would diminish spills on other routes where the chemicals are now transported.

Wood also denied that the plant is a serious polluter of the air and water. "We think [the incinerator] is on the right side of the environmental equation," he said. "For every pound of hazardous material, there is 0.00001 pounds of material that goes out through exhaust."

The dispute between residents and the company over environmental risks won't be easily settled. For starters, the process of evaluating the risks has become "excruciatingly long and complex," said Brad Shea, president of the Sacramento-based West Technology, which is working on the environmental impact report.

After the EIR becomes public in April, the Martinez City Council will hold public hearings before making a final ruling on the incinerator expansion.

Meanwhile, says Rudiger, membership in Communities for a Safe Environment is steadily growing.

BROWN JOINS IN FIGHTING PROP. 134 ALCOHOL TAX

ASSEMBLY SPEAKER Willie Brown has joined the alcoholic beverage industry in fighting Proposition 134, the nickel-a-drink initiative that would tax the industry to pay for substance abuse and health services.

With polls showing the measure enjoying strong voter support, Brown was crucial in pushing the industry's counter-initiative, Proposition 126, through the Assembly and onto the November ballot, say supporters of Prop. 134.

"He went crazy twisting arms," said Andrew McGuire, campaign chair for Prop. 134.

The industry initiative lost in the Assembly the first time through and was brought a second time for a vote on June 28th. Susan Mandel, president of Pacific Clinics in Los Angeles, was lobbying for Prop. 134, on behalf of the California Alliance for the Mentally Ill, when the second vote was taken.

Brown put pressure on Assembly members to vote for Prop. 126, Mandel said. "He was walking around the floor tapping people on the shoulder if he didn't like their vote."

Known as the penny-a-drink initiative, Prop. 126 is designed to confuse voters and split votes between the two initiatives, said McGuire.

The industry has made a major financial commitment to defeat Prop. 134, raising some $20 million for television ads and other purposes. The ads, charge supporters of Prop. 134, distort the impact of the nickel-a-drink measure by saying it will raise income and sales taxes (see Bay Guardian, 8/15/90). In fact, Prop. 134 calls for a tax only on the producers of alcohol, according to the language of the measure.

— Rick Fahler, West Coast environmental manager, Rhone-Poulenc

Prop. 134 would raise an annual $730 million in taxes for counties to distribute for emergency trauma care and to help victims of alcohol and drug abuse. The industry counter-initiative would generate a substantially lower $195 million for the general fund.

Brown's spokesperson Michael Reese said the speaker supports Prop. 126 because it would help with budget problems currently facing the Assembly. Reese added that taxes should not be "earmarked for pet projects," but rather "funneled to the general fund, giving government and leadership more discretion" over how those taxes should be distributed.

But the liquor industry has been good to the speaker. Brown's list of campaign donors of $1,000 or more for 1990 includes E & J Gallo Winery, CA Coors Fund, Anheuser-Busch Companies, Wine Institute Fund and Joseph E. Seagrams & Sons, Inc.

IMMIGRATION BILL MAY END ANTI-GAY INS DISCRIMINATION

WASHINGTON, D.C.

A LITTLE-PUBLICIZED amendment to a major immigration-reform bill, scheduled for a vote this fall in the House of Representatives, could be a significant victory for lesbian and gay rights.

Current immigration law prohibits the "mentally retarded, insane, [people] suffering from psychopathic personality traits, sexual deviants, narcotic drug addicts and chronic alcoholics" from entering the United States. But an amendment by Representative Barney Frank (D-Mass.) to an immigration-reform bill by Representative Bruce Morrison (D-Conn.) would not only eliminate the prohibition against "sexual deviants" but would actually prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

While he was at it, Frank updated the language of the law — his version simply prohibits the immigration of drug addicts and/or people with mental or physical disorders that are a threat to themselves or to others.

The immigration-reform bill — along with the Frank amendment — cleared the House Judiciary Committee by a voice vote, overriding Republican opposition, led by Representative William Dannemeyer (R-Calif.). When asked whether Dannemeyer voted against the immigration bill because of Frank's amendment, Dannemeyer aide Mike Franc responded that Dannemeyer opposed the bill "because it's a crazy quilt of legislation" —

Franc was not sure whether Frank's amendment was the reason for Dannemeyer's vote.

According to Franc, "Representative Dannemeyer is not a vigorous opponent" of the bill, but feels it is "uninspired and poorly drafted" and has become a vehicle for special-interest groups.

"Representative Dannemeyer is the son of two immigrants himself," Franc added. "He believes that immigrants can be an economic asset, if they come as skilled workers." However, Dannemeyer did oppose a similar move by Frank to remove the prohibition on "sexual deviants" in 1988.

"Immigration bills are always controversial, due to ideological and foreign policy differences," said Steve Smith, a lobbyist for the Human Rights Campaign Fund. Representative Morrison's immigration reform bill is no different, he said, and Frank's amendment is only a small part of the potential controversy.

Peter Kovar, Frank's press secretary, admitted the amendment is "just 1 percent of a huge immigration bill," but said that, for lesbian and gay rights advocates who want to see the immigration laws reformed, "it's the only train leaving the station" this year. Kovar said the entire bill should be voted on in the next couple of weeks or at least before Congress recesses at the end of the year.

A similar amendment, sponsored by Senator Alan Simpson (R-Wyo.), has been introduced to the Senate Immigration Subcommittee. According to Simpson aide Richard Day, Simpson's amendment would remove "sexual deviants" from the list of those prohibited from immigrating to the United States, but would prohibit immigration by anyone with a "dangerous contagious disease," a provision that has come under fire from the ACLU for its AIDS-related implications. Additionally, unlike the Frank amendment, Simpson's amendment does not specifically ban discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. Day speculated that Senator Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.), who chairs the Immigration Subcommittee, wants to reach an agreement with the ACLU before acting on the Simpson amendment.

the 1990 Organic Goods Act this month.

The bill, sponsored by Assemblyman Sam Farr (D-Monterey), would give county agricultural commissioners the power to police practices on farms claiming to be organic.

While actual busts of orga-fraud have been few, bill backers say the threat is growing as the market for organic produce expands.

"There is a higher potential for fraud as more people get into the market," said Darryl Young, Farr's legislative aide. People are "less driven by philosophy and more driven by profit" as the organic farming community expands from its pioneering core, said Young.

The most notorious case of non-organic produce being hawked as pure occurred in 1988, when the Pacific Organics Company packed 18 truckloads of Mexican carrots in sacks that said "organic." The company was cited by the state Department of Health Services and threatened with a civil suit before going out of business.

Many more abuses may have gone undetected.

"I think it would be the easiest thing in the world to cheat on," said Dan Joerling, produce worker at the Rainbow Grocery collective in San Francisco.

Even more so, now that the organic-produce industry has learned to grow and handle produce so that it looks just like food grown with chemicals, noted Robert Scowcroft, executive director of the California Certified Organic Farmers, which supports the bill.

The law would require that all growers, handlers and processors of organic foods register with the state Department of Food and Agriculture and pay a small fee based on their earnings.

The money would go toward enforcing updated standards. Fines of up to $5,000 will also be used to fund the program.

The act also narrows the definition of "organic." By 1996, organic crops will only be those grown in soil free of synthetic chemicals for at least three years. The old (1979) law required only a 12-month waiting time. Also, organic livestock will have to be fed 100 percent organic feed, rather than the current 60 percent.

CCOF's Scowcroft says the registration program is key to bolstering consumer confidence. "We as farmers want to protect the hard-earned trust of the consumer," who is usually paying a premium for the chemical-free food.

Joerling agrees. "The more verification you can go through, it's probably good," he said. At Rainbow, he labels many produce bins with a special blue label that warns shoppers: "This produce was sold to us as organic. We don't have the verification." He hopes the bill would eliminate some of that uncertainty.

Supporters say the program would not drive up prices — the program is expected to cost around $60,000 a year to run. Last year organic farmers in California took in $145 million, according to Scowcroft.

The bill, supported also by traditional agriculture groups, passed the Assembly Aug. 31st by a 77-0 vote and cleared the Senate 28-4. It is one of more than 1,500 bills needing the governor's signature before Sept. 30th.

Middle East coverage still flawed

The reprint of the interview with Phyllis Bennis (see Bay Guardian, 8/29/90) deserves reply.

First, I've been listening to Frontline and other NPR programs for some time, particularly during the current crisis in the Persian Gulf. Ms. Bennis is absolutely right that it's essential to listen to these programs to obtain information necessary to understand what is happening.

But when she states that Kuwait "used to be part of Iraq," she is (conveniently?) overlooking the fact that Iraq as a country did not exist until after World War I. It was formed by the British and French from several provinces of the Ottoman Empire, and its borders were established in the same set of occurrences as the setting aside of Kuwait as a separate entity.

Furthermore, in the same set of events, the borders of Iraq with Turkey, with Syria, with Jordan and with Iran were also established. Does Saddam Hussein consider them equally invalid? Why should Syria and Jordan feel safe from invasion in the future, especially when it is clear that Saddam Hussein can concoct whatever excuse he feels appropriate to justify aggression?

Ms. Bennis holds that Saddam Hussein's proposal to withdraw from Iraq if all other nations in the Middle East withdrew from "their occupied areas...deserved at least close scrutiny." Nonsense. That was nothing more than the daily attempt to divert attention from what had been done to Kuwait. No one took it seriously, and rightfully so.

Finally, Ms. Bennis just can't seem to keep out her bias against Israel. She warns against this crisis being used to ensure higher aid to Israel.

Well, let's see which countries are currently benefiting from this situation.

First, Saudi Arabia, whose land and oil fields are now (at least temporarily) protected from Iraqi seizure, and who has been able to raise the price of its oil while simultaneously pumping more, all without having to fight.

Next, the smaller countries of the Gulf — Bahrain, Oman, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates — for which the same holds true.

Then there's Egypt, the winner of seven-plus billions of U.S. dollars in forgiven debts plus promises of more U.S. aid.

Don't forget Syria, who suddenly has become one of our friends (more or less) despite its long-time sponsorship of terrorist groups.

Finally, non-Persian Gulf members of OPEC such as Venezuela and Nigeria, who will have bigger windfall oil profits than many major oil companies.

No, Israel won't benefit so much from this situation, except perhaps in some temporary peace of mind until the next Arab demagogue arises. At the end of all this, the Arab countries will still be in a state of war with Israel. Nothing will have changed.

Conscientiousness-raising objector

"Fighting not to fight" was an appropriate title for a good article about the problem of conscientious objection (see Bay Guardian, 9/12/90). Especially for those people in the armed forces who are being sent to a possible battlefield, the military buildup in the Middle East has certainly stirred up the wheels for thought about the American lifestyle and what a person is willing to die for.

Apparently, we have two currently exemplary and publicized responses by young men in the military to comprehend. The recent "I don't believe in war...but it's my job" letter by Wade Merritt that President Bush is waving around and the Conscientious Objector application by Erik Larsen.

My problems with both of these responses represent a confusion that seems to be created by the military system itself. Basically, the military requires its members to unquestioningly follow orders to the point of risking their lives. and, since the main "business" of the military is to fight wars (whether defensively or offensively), how can a person join, go through basic training and be a working member of a military team unless he agrees to the goal of the "business" that he signed up to work for in the first place?

My guess is that people who say "it's my job" assume that they can do, at work, what they wouldn't normally do if they weren't working at a particular job. Isn't that what a lot of Nazis said, after the fact of WWII, in explaining their participation in violent totalitarianism? As to filing for CO status while on duty in the military, I presume that, after joining the military and being trained in how to kill people and carry on the chores of war, a person could then decide that it just isn't the way that he would like to behave in relation to his fellow man during his lifetime.

As a civilian, I applied for CO status during the Vietnam "War" partly because I wanted to choose my fight when the government, at that time, didn't seem to recognize that I had that right, and partly because I really didn't want to be "brainwashed" by being part of any military system. However, I admire Erik's objection because: 1) he is already in the military system, which means he went through a tough training regime, and he must have some courage to step forward and say, "No, I won't participate in it any more," and 2) he is doing it before Americans are actually fighting and dying, so he is making his statement without the eminent threat of death or injury but only with that possibility in some future conflict, and 3) finally, because he has made it into the media, he is, essentially, telling people that, just because a person is in the military, it doesn't mean that he has to leave his mind and opinions in a garage somewhere.

However, I also admire Wade Merritt's dedication to his "job." He chose to enter the armed forces as a volunteer and is now standing forward to say that he is keeping his word as a young man facing possible danger. He has given his decision serious thought and responded with conviction, too.

Both of these men have led me to think and remember the issues that were raised in the Vietnam era. The Vietnam War greatly divided families and the country. To object to it seemed unpatriotic by those who felt that we should have unquestionably "supported our boys," and to object to go to it seemed to be the only way to encourage resolution rather than more violence.

I agree with Erik Larsen: just what the hell are we fighting for if people in or out of the military can't step forward with objections and say what's on their minds? Calling Erik a coward is ludicrous. Sometimes raising objections and stating that you really are a non-violent individual at heart is the bravest thing that a man can do, especially in a society whose male population has largely gained its ego identification through its established position of world military dominance and, on an individual interactive level, through competition based on physical strength or power.

Here I am

I must respond to the statement in your "Fall Theater: Shock of the New" article in the Bay Guardian's Sept. 12th issue: "Oakland Ensemble Theatre is currently without a place to perform or an artistic director."

I became OET's producing director (replacing Benny Sato Ambush as producing director — OET does not use the title "Artistic director") on June 18, 1990 with a one-year contract. My contract recently was extended to two years by OET's Board of Trustees.

It is true that due to renovations under way at the Alice Arts Center, where OET has been an anchor tenant since 1985, OET does not have a home theater in which to produce this year. There are two ways to report this. We, of course, prefer a positive approach: report how OET is creatively meeting the challenge during its second homeless season in six years.

Under my guidance, OET is co-producing — with ACT and in association with Festival 2000 — a major production of The Gospel at Colonus in October. At the end of this month, we begin working in six Oakland public high schools, helping students create their own one-act plays. Through this program, we are also building future audiences for all theaters in the Bay Area.

We plan the continuation of OET's joint venture with Upstart Stage to produce play-readings to be held both in Berkeley and Oakland. We are currently seeking funding and a performance space to present Marijo's one-woman show about AIDS, Yonder Comes Day, at the end of this year. A revival of OET's 1988 hit production of Sisters is planned for April at Laney College. In June of 1991, OET will produce a workshop production of a new work commissioned by OET that is based on Virginia Hamilton's novel, The Magical Adventures of Pretty Pearl.

Please give us credit for what we are doing and recognize that I am fully engaged in carrying out my duties as producing director of OET.

Sharon Walton
Producing Director
Oakland Ensemble Theatre

Misha Berson replies:

We appreciate the clarification of OET's situation. It's good to know the company is staying active and looking to the future.

Literary gayness

Steve Abbott's Gay Voices, "Culture(s) = Life," (see Bay Guardian, 9/5/90) virtually advocates cultural Balkanization for gay, black, Hispanic, Asian, Native American and female Americans, as he brands Western Civilization as the sole property of white, heterosexual, male European-Americans. That's utter nonsense and probably reflects internalized homophobia seeking its own ghetto.

The authors mentioned by Abbott — Willa Cather, Herman Melville, Walt Whitman, Gertrude Stein, Hart Crane and Lord Byron — have achieved literary greatness, not because of their sexual orientations, but because they have escaped the peculiar particularities of their time by producing some literature which echoes and transmits the enduring universal values of Western Civilization.

In the United States we experience Western Civilization primarily through the English language. We ourselves or our forebears may have once spoken another language, Western or otherwise, but both they and/or we eventually became acculturized into the English-language tradition of Western Civilization.

This is our cultural heritage, regardless of our racial, ethnic, religious and previous language backgrounds — and both sex and sexual orientation are basically irrelevant.

By appearing to advocate a gay cultural ghetto separate from Western Civilization, Abbott is buying into the cultural bigotry that gayness is outside of Western Civilization. The reality is that gayness is simply an integral component of all civilizations, including our own Western Civilization.

For the record

In the Sept. 12th issue of the Bay Guardian, Ron Nowicki's interview with William Kotzwinkle had two factual errors: Kotzwinkle wrote the screenplay for the film Nightmare on Elm Street IV, not Murder on..., and he wrote the novelization of Superman III, not Superman.

In the Sept. 19th issue of the Bay Guardian Dining Supplement, the author's name was inadvertently left off the article 'Meatless Minors,' about children and vegetarianism. The author is Judy Krizmanic. We regret the omission.

Straight Talk About A Wrinkled Business.

A Fresh Look at Service.

At San Francisco Cleaners service means convenience. Like being open weekends, (yes, Sunday too!) and late on weekdays (til 9pm) so you can come in when it fits your schedule -not ours. And like doing all our work right on our own premises-not somebody else's. So you get your clothes back next day, or even same day, if you ask.

You Get Superior Quality, Not Claims.

We go to great lengths to control our quality.

First, we inspect each garment, treat it for spots, pretreat it, and then pre-test all delicate items before cleaning.

Then your clothes are laundered or dry cleaned in the best, most sophisticated machines available. You get cleaner clothes that actually last substantially longer than at other cleaners. And that's not all.

Finally, every garment is individually inspected and touched up or respotted, if necessary. If a button is missing, a new one gets put on without you ever having ask.

We Really Care About Your Clothes.

That's why we do so many extras for you at no extra cost.

Take shirts, for instance. We actually separate them by color, bag them in protective mesh nets, and then individually adjust water temperature and wash cycle to each load. Then we rinse them twice. Your shirts will actually last twice as long at San Francisco Cleaners.

To make you feel more comfortable, we use real corn starch and let you choose exactly how much starch you want (five levels). Even our labelling machine is unique, because it bonds real (removable) cotton labels into the fabric, so they won't scratch your neck or mar your shirts.

Fact is, we're putting a whole new wrinkle in the cleaning business. Why not stop today? And bring your smiling face.

SHIRTS 99¢ (reg. $1.40)

Beautifully laundered and pressed with your choice of five levels of starch

PANTS $2.50 (reg. $3.50)

AT CITY HALL

BY JIM BALDERSTON

DISASTER OF THE WEEK

Some things just make you want to grind your teeth in frustration.

Consider the case of Lucille Lockhart, a member of the city's Human Rights Commission who also happens to get around by means of two rather cumbersome crutches.

Lucille's diminutive size only serves to make the crutches look larger and more unwieldy.

My first contact with Lockhart was over the telephone a year or so ago. During our discussions of the political realities of San Francisco, I was truly impressed by her sharp appreciation of political realities and her genuine enthusiasm for getting things done despite the grim realities she so clearly recognized.

But most of all I was (and still am) impressed with her spunk. It was (and still is, I hope) clear that nothing was going to deter Lucille Lockhart.

So imagine my surprise when Lockhart sent me an article she authored, along with photographs, outlining the following situation:

The Human Rights Commission meets in the Department of Public Health's auditorium at 101 Grove. In the front of the auditorium is a raised platform where the commissioners sit. Two steps and a brass gate must be negotiated to ascend to the platform, a feat of little notice to those of us that have full use of our legs, but one that is exceedingly difficult for Lockhart and completely impossible for someone using a wheelchair.

Lockhart writes that despite "repeated appeals, requests and inquiries," the situation has not been corrected by the Department of Health.

"Something is wrong, and I don't know how to fix it: even the simplest, most glaringly obvious problems seem to go unaddressed," she wrote.

But most maddening are the following lines: "With every meeting I become physically more nervous and uncomfortable. Worst of all, I feel discouraged and disillusioned."

Folks, when someone like Lucille Lockhart feels "discouraged and disillusioned," things are in a very bad way indeed.

The Mission Bay battle, Round II

THE BATTLE over San Francisco's largest private development project shifts to the Board of Supervisors next week as the Select Committee on Mission Bay begins a series of five public hearings.

Starting Oct. 4th, the committee, chaired by Supervisor Richard Hongisto, will hold hearings each Thursday afternoon until Nov. 1st — just before Election Day.

The extensive hearing schedule is a victory for Mission Bay critics, who have called on the board to provide ample time for discussing a wide range of complex issues involving the 315-acre project. With Hongisto chairing the meetings, it's likely project opponents will have every opportunity to air their concerns, and supporters will have plenty of time to respond. All five hearings will be held in the board chambers, on the second floor of City Hall. The hearings all begin at 2 pm.

The Oct. 4th hearing will include an overview of the project and discussion of open space, wetlands, parks, toxics, transportation and environmental review. Later hearings will address subjects like jobs, economic development, community facilities, housing, phasing of the project, assessments, financing and the entire development agreement.

The committee co-chair is Jim Gonzalez. Other members include Angela Alioto, Tom Hsieh and Doris Ward.

The Mission Bay plan has already been tentatively approved by the Planning Commission, and final approval is still pending. The commissioners are waiting for the City Attorney's Office to finish work on all the amendments to the development agreement that the commission has demanded. However, it's unlikely the commission will go back on its statement of "intent to approve" the project.

Most of the supervisors also support Mission Bay. However, during an election year, the impact of high-profile hearings could be considerable. I hear that many of the committee members (and some other powerful supervisors) would have been much happier to have one, simple hearing and get the whole thing over with. Congrats to Supervisor Hongisto for refusing to accept a whitewash.

For details on the final schedule of subjects to be discussed, call Hongisto's office at 554-5664 or the clerk of the board at 554-5184.

See you there.

Carol Ruth's comeback

FORMER SUPERVISOR Carol Ruth Silver, who was defeated in her re-election bid in 1988, is showing significant strength in her bid to regain a seat on the board, polls show.

For years, Silver enjoyed strong support from liberals, progressives and gays in the city, although much of that support eroded when she began buying real estate and stopped voting for vacancy control. But she still, apparently, enjoys high name recognition (and some surprising support) among those groups, and several people who have seen recent polls told me Silver's ranking was "dramatically" high.

In fact, a lot of San Franciscans seem to think Silver is still on the board.

However, early polls probably mean little. If the other major challengers can raise enough money and spend it on an intelligent, effective campaign that gets the right message out to the voters, Silver's greatest asset, her name recognition, will become far less important.

Silver seems to realize that she, too, needs plenty of cash, and it's clear where she's going to try to get it. Last Saturday, at the Democratic County Central Committee, Silver emphasized the need to be responsive to the business community, most notably downtown. In fact, Silver seemed happy to defy the DCCC, noting in her opening remarks that she "knows it is highly unlikely that the Democratic cabal" would endorse her. Silver spent almost all of her time in front of the DCCC talking about the needs of downtown, pointing out that homelessness and dirty streets are "bad for business."

Silver later told us that she was not working to get downtown support, because "there aren't many votes down there."

But then again, she also said she didn't remember spending all of her time in front of the DCCC sounding like a Chamber of Commerce candidate. "I didn't take notes," she told me.

Deja vu all over again?

LAST NOVEMBER, proponents of the downtown ballpark campaign, particularly Mayor Agnos, asked the gay community to support the new stadium, in return for support of the domestic-partners ordinance on the same ballot.

To a large extent, gay leaders kept their part of the bargain, supplying political endorsements and campaign muscle to the ballpark campaign.

But it was not an even trade. Agnos, for example, spoke passionately at a Black Leadership Forum meeting about the importance of the ballpark. But he didn't even broach the subject of the domestic-partners proposition. Now Catellus Development Corporation — the sponsor of Mission Bay — wants to play the same game. According to my sources, Catellus is working to gain gay-community support for the project by promising to help fund the campaign for Proposition K, this year's version of the domestic-partners ordinance.

When the campaign financing reports come out next month, we'll let you know just how much money is involved, and whether Catellus is as tricky as the mayor.

This week at City Hall appears weekly in the Bay Guardian. Tips, information and suggestions for upcoming events and items can be sent in care of Jim Balderston, Bay Guardian, 520 Hampshire St., SF 94100, or leave a message at 255-3100.

Everything's under control here...from timbres so fragile you hear the air around them...to cataclysmic video soundtracks that throw the rules for sonic scale, overboard. One moment it's tenderloin & truffles in V.V.S.O.P, the next it's steak tartare. That's the real world of speaker-power, and both extremes are zilch without the beef.

That's the Big Hafler Excelinear Amplifier from honkers. Think of it as two 305-Watt sides of it, strong as an ox into actual speakers; calm and collected, with on-demand forced-air cooling; reliably grazing on PG&E, with a lineage of purebred quality headed straight for 40 years.

Now look it over. On the backside where it's branded. How exotic! How amazing!! Pass the smelling-salts!!! The Hafler comes from far-off Tempe, Arizona; USA. Stars 'n bars, it's made there; from chassis rustproofing, to the impeccable studio-grey or Palomino Ivory finishes.

That's the shocker. The last frontier for an American owned full-line of affordable American-made separates. Preamps. Tuners. Compact Disc Players. And the first Remote Control System made for American minds to grasp and American hands to work! Like radical man; it's home-grow'd.

Best of all, you can afford the biggest of the Haflers because it's a no-frills, no corners-cut kind of outfit. So if your speakers are worth it to you, figure how much wussie-power "they've" told you YOU GOTTA HAVE... then whack it in half with the Hafler.

No Bull.

Hitch up your present stereo receiver with the Hafler 290 Watt XL-280, just $725. Or make it a whole new breed of animal with the 620 Watt XL-600 for $1,250.

Pick it up. Go ahead, pick it up. No, we haven't bolted it to the floor.

It's just that the Hafler bullheadedly adheres to the oldtimey dictum "might makes right". Too, maybe you've become inured to decades of nouvelle-cuisine solid-state wussiepower? Spec-sheets making mouth-watering promises, and power supplies offering up textured soy fluff?

We call it "Hi-Fi Light", in the current dining parlance of paying top-dollar for something that's full of nothing.

Turn it on. Go ahead and turn it on! Something about the Hafler gives you the idea it's been stomping at the dust and it's mad as hell.

Speakers are not steady 4 or 8 ohm loads; their bass-ranges are far more resistant, far hungrier. The XL-600 stores thundering herds of real power (72,000 uf's), to tirelessly whomp those woofers with the speed and control of butcher Verbrugge's meat cleaver. Speaker impedance ratings are an unrealistic myth; in use, they often hit 2-digit numbers; and "technology" has alas not repealed the laws of physics.

After years of believing less-is-more from lightweight boxes making heavyweight claims, the Hafler brings you abruptly to your senses. Hallelujah, you're not stupid after all. Less is less!

Especially now, with digital discs; and with the threat of goring your speakers on thunderbolts of turntable feedback removed.

Listen to it. Just listen. "Holy..." "Holy what?" "Cow?" Un-HUH. Sure.

In cahoots with honkers' exclusive 6-gauge-OFC hardwiring, the Hafler guarantees you revelations. Profound and expansive, describes the first three octaves of underpinning (10-80Hz), emerging into solid and

Prior to Yamaha's new Unity Servo Systems, about the best you could hope for in "racks & compacts" has been "balanced mediocrity". Now we challenge you to find separate components for even twice the price, that can meaningfully beat the scope and finesse of Yamaha Unity sound. The Yamaha C-10 is $797 at honkers; the C-11 is $200 more. Certainly all the look-alike, similarly priced stuff on the market, pales alongside them.

YAMAHA C-10 $797 at honkers

The Unity Systems pack a Compact Disc Player; a dual-well, auto-reverse Dolby Cassette Deck; an AM/FM Tuner with 10 pre-sets; a 4-Band Equalizer; a 48-Watt Amplifier; a 24-Hour synchro Clock/Timer; and a pair of Yamaha Servo-Technology Speaker Systems into a very heavy little, very high quality package. The styling is very clean and understated (no goofy goo-gaws!); your TV-sound and/or VCR/LaserDisc player plug right in; and the Yamaha Unity Remote Control (included) runs the whole marvelous audio system.

You'll grow to love it very quickly.

Yamaha Servo Speaker/Amplifier Technology offers up flat response with "punch" down to 40Hz. And if that's not low enough, hitch up a Servo Subwoofer. Yamaha's new worldbeater YST-SW100 is 70-Watt self-powered, and flat down to 21Hz.

Watch Your Step,

Speaker Shoppers.

It's a Pasture Out There!

Not all new speaker systems are created equally. Many come and go; not just new models but whole trademarks.

Often "NEW" is a bait for lollipops; gullible shoppers who relinquish control of the speaker demo-room: ON goes some CD selected for your entertainment, rather than clear decision-making; UP goes the sound-pressure level...and it's Jonestown from that moment on.

You're always in control, at honkers.

Say. Here's a stroke-of-genius idea! Bring us a familiar CD that's very "acoustic" and easy for you to follow, for your audition. Turn the volume down. Way way down. Poopsheets and copywriters' ravings can't bail out a system's second-rate internal components, when you turn it down...and listen. Compare. Whisper-soft volume strips away the lies.

And guess what? While an otherwise who's who of speaker brands at other stores will vanish into the baseboards, the utterly intimidating excellence of B&W from honkers extends itself in a lateral panorama, then reaches articulately across the distance to grab you by the soul.

No tricks. No falsehoods. Raw quality is all that's at work here.

Now crank it up! That's "B&W Sound", Wothing, England.

Yes England; you know, the country that more-or-less invented literature, woodcrafting, and metalurgy; not to mention jet power, radar, and HIGH FIDELITY! That's our B&W; the international benchmark for the serious-music recording industry.

FOR 1991, two NEW ranges of B&W Digital Monitors, the DM600 and DM300 Series, and three additional B&W Matrix 800's, join "The Finest Dynamic Loudspeaker Systems in The World". True believers, take heart. We NOW have your number, from under $300 to $5,900 a pair. Eleven magnificent models, ONE glorious family of craftsmanship and listening qualities.

Let's review that test to spill-the-beans: "Turn it down to hear the quality; take it home and turn it loose!"

We believe so emphatically in B&W that we guarantee them to satisfy you in your home, with your music and your components, unconditionally.

Okay. It's safe to walk now.

Union says new contract with downtown stores protects workers

BUCKING TWO trends — toward sales quotas for department-store employees and toward labor "givebacks" in union contracts — San Francisco Local 1100 of the Department Store Workers Union recently won "almost non-concessionary" contracts with Macy's and Emporium, according to the local's president, Bill Fiore.

In contract negotiations that had been going on since last April (see Bay Guardian, 8/22/90), the key issue the stores' demand for provisions to increase pressure on employees to sell more, Fiore told the Bay Guardian.

While the Macy's contract, ratified Sept. 1st, allows management to change "sales incentive" (commission) systems, Fiore said, managers will have to notify the union of changes and follow specified guidelines that protect workers. The union will review the systems each year and can submit them to arbitration if it feels they are unfair.

Emporium management, Fiore said, had proposed language that would allow the store to discipline employees who failed to meet sales quotas, but Emporium dropped that demand before its workers ratified their contract Sept. 19th.

Macy's and the union agreed to a contract, Fiore said, shortly after the union planned a rally outside Macy's downtown store, and Emporium settled after two brief rallies were held there. "We heard through the management grapevine," Fiore said, "that the rallies were really effective — management really didn't want the rallies."

Macy's and Emporium managements have declined to talk to the press throughout the negotiations.

TV Marti wins approval for broadcasts to Cuba

WHILE PRESIDENT Bush sends troops to Iraq in the name of preserving international law, he is also sending U.S. propaganda to Cuba, in violation of it.

TV Marti, the U.S. government's latest propaganda assault on Cuba, received final approval from Bush on Aug. 27th, although a United Nations group has voted that it violates a U.N. accord restricting broadcasts within national borders.

The Voice of America project, which will cost taxpayers at least $16 million a year, has proven to be completely ineffective in reaching Cuban television viewers. The Cubans jammed TV Marti within its first few seconds on the air, and then began blocking its sister station, Radio Marti.

Both stations started as Reagan campaign promises to the anti-Castro Cuban-American exile community in Miami. Radio Marti went on the air in 1985 and, in March of this year, TV Marti began its test period.

The station's purpose is to "let the people know what is going on," said Voice of America's spokesperson Mike Schoenfeld. "Castro has denied Cubans the chance to hear the truth for years."

To overcome the technical problems involved with beaming the broadcasts to Cuba, TV Marti is beamed via a blimp floated two miles in the air over the Florida Keys. However, thanks to a simple $10 piece of equipment, the daily broadcasts — from midnight to 3 am on Cuba's Channel 13 — have been jammed by the Cuban government. Few, if any, Cubans have actually seen the Voice of America programming.

Nonetheless, after the test period ended last month, President Bush called the station a technical success and released the funds that Congress had appropriated for TV Marti's operation.

"[Bush] said that a clear and excellent signal has been received in Cuba," said John Nichols, a professor of mass communications at Pennsylvania State University who has been monitoring the project.

"He also said that Cuba has consistently and effectively jammed TV Marti, that there is no way to overcome the jamming, and that the actual size of the audience, if any, is unknown. He also reported that, as a result of TV Marti, the Cubans have blocked Radio Marti as well."

TV Marti also raises legal problems, which Bush simply ignored when he authorized it last month. The project is a blatant violation of the International Telecommunications Convention of 1982.

The U.N. accord spells out guidelines for maintaining broadcasts within national borders.

The U.N.'s International Telecommunications Union has twice ruled that the United States is in violation of the accord, supporting Cuba's requests that TV Marti broadcasts cease.

Patients' rights movement wins big victory in Sacramento

THE GRASSROOTS movement for mental patients' rights scored a big victory in Sacramento last month by defeating a bill that would have gutted a patient's right to refuse psychiatric medications.

Sponsored by Bruce Bronzan, an assemblyman who has received substantial campaign contributions from psychiatric, hospital and medical associations, AB 190 would have made it easier for psychiatrists forcibly to drug patients who refuse medication.

The bill would have overturned a landmark 1989 state Supreme Court decision, Riese vs. St. Mary's, which ushered in a new era of patients' rights by allowing patients to refuse powerful, dangerous and sometimes deadly medication.

The California Psychiatric Association immediately called the court decision unworkable and convinced Bronzan, the powerful chair of the Assembly Health Committee, to introduce AB 190 to weaken the Supreme Court decision.

But advocates from the Network of Mental Health Clients and other groups began intensive lobbying, which culminated in a heated legislative battle.

With time running out in the 1990 legislative session, the feuding lobbying factions came up with a compromise, said Jenny Miller, a network lobbyist. When Bronzan still couldn't find the votes to get the bill out of a conference committee, the advocates thought the bill was dead and went home.

Hours later, at 7 pm, Bronzan reconvened the committee and asked for a vote on a modified bill that violated the earlier compromise in favor of the psychiatric lobby. "It was the most deceitful move I've ever seen in the Legislature," said Miller.

But once again Bronzan was unable to move the bill out of committee. Determined to get his bill passed, again he tried to push the bill through the Senate, and again he failed.

"It's a great victory," said Miller.

But the fight may not be over yet.

Advocates say Bronzan's underhanded tactics are a sign that he will not rest until he pleases his campaign contributors and overturns the fundamental right of psychiatric patients to refuse to take drugs.

Budget bottom line: Kids are losers, advocates say

AFTER THE dust settled from both state and city budget battles, children were mainly losers, according to an analysis in the September issue of a newsletter from Coleman Advocates for Children and Youth.

The groups' budget post-mortem acknowledges that San Francisco did add a few new services for children in this year's budget, including special programs for foster children, for child victims of sexual abuse and for homeless children.

Especially notable were new family-based and community-based programs for delinquent youth, which seem to represent a move in the direction Coleman and its allies have advocated for years, toward supportive services and away from incarceration.

But on the whole, Coleman criticized city budget decisions as once again slighting children, while pointing out that state budget cuts reduced the income of the city's poorest children, those on Aid to Families with Dependent Children, and cut health care, drug treatment and juvenile justice services.

Meanwhile, the Coalition for an African American Agenda, a coalition of youth advocates, civil rights and neighborhood groups, dramatized the victimization of San Francisco children by violent crime at a City Hall rally Sept. 25th, at which demonstrators carried 26 coffins, each representing a young person killed in San Francisco in the last two years.

Youth advocates are now turning their attention to the fall election, with a supervisory candidates' night Oct. 3rd, hosted by Coleman. The future of children's issues on the board is of special concern this year, since Nancy Walker, the only supervisor credited by Coleman with initiating new children's services in the past year, is leaving the board after the election.

GAY MATTERS

Operatic lives: Nathan Lane and Richard Thomas in The Lisbon Traviata.

Theater and the absurd

By David Israels

I CAN'T help being excited by the fact that Terrence McNally's superb play, The Lisbon Traviata, is at the Marine's Memorial Theatre through Nov. 4th, in its West Coast premiere.

Finally, a good play comes to the near-desert that is the San Francisco theater scene, filled as it is with tourist treacle, experimental claptrap and — can you believe it — political plays.

The two-act Lisbon is alternately a comic and tragic tale about the kind of gay men who love the opera too much and the ones whose love is too operatic. But you don't need to know a thing about opera or care a whit for gay love to enjoy this play. The themes, as they say, are universal.

I saw Lisbon in its second off-Broadway incarnation last November. Though this third version is presented under the aegis of schlock maven Carole Shorenstein Hays, I still have high hopes for the production.

That's because the play's original director, John Tillenger, is again at the helm, as are those who designed the play's fine sets, costumes, lighting and sound. Even better is the fact that Nathan Lane is reprising his bitchy, hilarious role of Mendy, a Maria Callas fanatic. In this production, Richard ("I'm Not Gay; I'm Just Sensitive") Thomas replaces Anthony Heald in the play's other key role of Stephen.

Though Heald's absence is sure to be felt, Thomas — the former John-Boy Walton — has recently shown himself capable of more than pap TV. Most recently, he distinguished himself as an AIDS widow in McNally's PBS drama Andre's Mother. Still, there's no getting around the fact that Thomas's school-girl voice and that ubiquitous mole of his just makes you want to grab him by the throat and slap the grin off his face.

Most intriguing is the news that McNally has again rewritten portions of Lisbon. Earlier, the script had come under fire from critics for making too abrupt a transition between the first and second acts.

Act One sparks, as Mendy and Stephen's tart-tongued repartee takes us on a delightful verbal flight from Callas mania to the sad state of Mendy's love life. In Act Two, comedy turns to tragedy as we witness the final scenes of Stephen's breakup with his long-time lover, Mike.

Critics, however, were far more upset about the play's melodramatic finish. In the play's original ending, Stephen's oversized operatic emotions erupt with murderous results when Mike tries to walk out on him. Though many complained that the bloody denouement was just too much, I liked it. I found it easy to accept. It was metaphorically perfect. What better way to end a play about mad opera queens than with a finish right out of opera's own mad passions?

Last year, McNally altered the play's last moments. That change, for the most part, satisfied all-important New York Times critic Mel Gussow, who grunted that with the "new nonviolent ending . . . McNally recognizes that life is not grand opera." So much for Gussow's ability to suspend disbelief.

Now I read in Steven Winn's well-done advance story in the Sunday Chronicle that McNally has tinkered further with the script. Winn didn't say how, and who really cares. Let's just be glad that Mendy, Stephen and their beloved Maria will once again be heard.

Crit Crap: I may not be a theater critic, but I know bad writing when I see it. And theater critic Gerald Nachman, of the Chronicle, outdid himself two Sundays ago in a cliché-ridden look at the upcoming season on Broadway.

Here's how he describes early rehearsal days: "Casts sit in semicircles around the director, producer and playwright, reading new scripts in T-shirts with the name of the show emblazoned on the front, clutching iced coffee in Styrofoam cups and munching tepid pizza."

As you can see, Ger has a real bad eye for detail. Munching tepid pizza? What's truly incredible is that he goes on in this vein for 10 paragraphs.

You say it can't be done. Well, get a load of this: "Each season always promises more than it can deliver." (Thank you Svengali, you got any more insights?) "In mid-September, there are no second nights, no last nights, no two-week closing notices, no petitions to fire Frank Rich." (And one wishes, no Nachman.)

Editor O, Readers. 1: Thanks to those dozen or so readers who sent in personal, not-for-publication notes and letters in response to the column, "They call it 'living with AIDS.'" "

It was a painful piece to write. But I hoped it would tell some of the truth about what it's like for those of us who have had so many dear ones die in the epidemic. I was also sick of reading those "positive-about-being-positive" pieces.

The response was particularly pleasing, because readers don't usually write unless I've pissed them off. It's a knack I seem to have.

And it just goes to show how wrong editors can be. My editor refused to give the column cover play, commenting that he thought the piece was a "little predictable." The boyfriend had the best response to that bit of editorial judgement. Said he, "Oh sure, you read columns about the death of all your friends every day."

Residents watch as crews rehabilitate the Alemany public housing project. Only three tenants got jobs in the rehab work — and that was only after tenants picketed.

Can tenants run the projects?

Tenants in the Alemany housing project say they're ready to start learning how to manage the project themselves. Is the SFHA ready to let them?

By Mary Pols

PUBLIC-HOUSING tenant Mabel Coney says she doesn't really have the time to show the camera crews from 60 Minutes around anymore.

As resident manager of the Cochran Gardens public housing project in St. Louis, Coney is all too used to visits from the media. In a telephone interview from St. Louis, she described a typical press visit: She welcomes the reporters in, shows them around the carefully maintained grounds, gives them the current statistics on unemployment in the project, describes how the residents handle drug-use by fellow-tenants and maybe winds up the tour at the day-care center. Then she sends the press home, and gets back to her daily business.

The reason for all the media attention is that Coney's public-housing project is decidedly different. As one of the nation's few self-managed public-housing projects, Cochran Gardens is a success story in a world where success is rare.

Most Americans have given up on housing projects. We mentally block them out on the map, with an ever-growing circle of decay spreading out from them, as neighborhoods to be avoided.

But for many low-income Americans, projects simply can't be avoided.

Some, like a group of residents in San Francisco's Alemany Housing Project, are involved in efforts to reclaim housing projects as viable communities, by setting up the kind of tenant-management system that Cochran Garden tenants pioneered.

Alemany is one of several San Francisco housing projects targeted by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development and the San Francisco Housing Authority for "self-management." In HUD parlance, "self-management" is not a utopian scheme for participatory democracy, but a practical arrangement, in which a group of tenants forms a nonprofit corporation that contracts with the housing authority to perform day-to-day management functions — maintenance, bookkeeping, admission of new tenants, groundskeeping and, to some extent, policing the area to cut down on crime. Public housing tenants become the managers through a "resident management corporation."

In Washington, HUD Secretary Jack Kemp is promoting this arrangement as the way to save the nation's public housing projects. "Kemp is pushing for this vigorously," said Dirk Murphy, public affairs director for HUD's San Francisco regional office. "Nationwide, the enthusiasm for self-management programs is definitely coming from HUD."

Enthusiasm for self-management in San Francisco is coming largely from a middle-aged grandmother of five. Alta Scales has lived at the Alemany housing project for 18 years. About two years ago, she told the Bay Guardian, she finally got fed up with broken windows, graffiti, delayed repairs and slow police response to complaints. She joined the tenant association.

"I saw a definite need," said Scales, "and I felt that I was going to have to be the one to get out there and do it." Now the president of the Alemany Tenant Association, Scales is eager to see the talk of self-management materialize into reality.

IT'S NOT only the tenant-management experiment that's new at Alemany this fall. If the resident-management project gets underway next month as planned, it will coincide with a massive, $7 million inside-and-out rehabilitation of the Alemany Housing Project's 158 apartments. "The idea is certainly to start with a clean slate," said Al Nelson, the Housing Authority's director of planning and construction.

Audrey Washington, a longtime Alemany tenant who has been active, with Scales, in working for tenant management, explained why she thinks the plan would help restore the project to the kind of community she remembers there 15 years ago.

Standing in a rundown basketball court next to her still-to-be-rehabilitated building, she explained, "The people who were part of it [the community] would watch out for things like that graffiti on the wall over there. They would talk to that child's parents that was causing trouble, without getting cussed up. The managers would be going through the same thing that their neighbors are going through. There would be concern about making things look good. They could enforce rules better because they would always be here, and they would care more."

David Gillmore, director of the Housing Authority, made a similar point. Although he cautioned that it is "not a panacea," he said: "The beauty of resident management is that the people who manage the project are always there. There is something unique about the relationship between residents that manage a project and other residents."

Helen Mason, another longtime public-housing tenant activist, talked about some of the other ways she hopes resident management can improve public housing. "When the government started building public housing projects, they were supposed to be stepping stones to better things," she said. "People weren't supposed to spend their lives in projects. A lot of kids, they live in projects all the way through high school, and somehow, they are allowed to graduate high school without the most basic skills or goal development. They need incentive.

"I remember a neighbor I had once," Mason continued. "She lived next to a project, mowing the lawn just about everyday, taking care of her yard. After awhile, out of guilt, or neighborhood pride, or whatever, I started taking care of my lawn."

"This idea of self-management is supposed to provide an incentive. For one thing, there would be jobs, custodial and administrative, for the tenants. And they would be taking care of their own homes, responsible for running the place."

JOBS FOR tenants, though, is somewhat of a sore point at Alemany — and residents' recent experiences with that issue contribute to the wary, wait-and-see attitude that even active tenants expressed about the Housing Authority's commitment to resident management.

During the summer, Scales organized a demonstration against the contractors who were rehabilitating the project, demanding they comply with HUD regulations that called for tenant hiring in rehab projects. Eventually, three tenants were hired for construction jobs.

Tenants also expressed frustration with delays in the rehab project, originally funded in 1987. "I'm not even sure when the rehab is going to be done," Scales said. "Housing blames it on the contractors, the contractors blame it on Housing. It disgusts me."

So far, Scales and Washington said their experiences with the resident management plan have raised similar doubts. More than a year ago, the SFHA allocated $70,000 to train Alemany tenants to manage their project, and last year the agency sent Scales and Washington to a national conference of public-housing resident-management groups. Still, there have been no moves toward tenant management at Alemany.

Mason said it's important that the process of training residents at Alemany to take over administrative tasks begin as soon as possible. "Right now, the worst project in the city is Hunter's View," she said, "And it was completely rehabbed in the '70s. When it was finished it was beautiful. I mean beautiful. But because the underlying problems there were never dealt with, it went right back to the way it had been."

Scales agreed. "We've got to get started really soon, otherwise all those units are going to be finished, and people are going to move back in, and the clean slate will be gone," she said.

Gillmore admitted that, to an outsider, it may appear that the SFHA has been dragging its feet on getting tenant management started.

"I can understand where that perception comes from," he told the Bay Guardian, "and I may bear some of the responsibility. A year and a half ago, there was a contract with a firm for management training. I reviewed it and it was terrible. The Housing Authority hadn't asked for enough, and the bidders hadn't come up with enough."

But Audrey Washington, and another Alemany resident who asked not to be named, told the story differently. They said they had selected the training firm, only to have that choice vetoed by the Housing Authority. "The Housing Authority does what it wants to do," Washington commented.

Gillmore said another reason for the delay was that "a year ago, the SF Housing Authority wasn't administratively or managerially ready to participate in this kind of demonstration. It wasn't able to manage its own work out of a bag. It wasn't even capable of overseeing its own domain. And a y-ago I don't think the tenants were ready either."

Deborah Morrison, director of resident services for the SFHA, said she'll be in charge once the tenant-management project gets underway. Last week's HUD grant to the Housing Authority added another $150,000 to the $70,000 already earmarked for resident training at Alemany, plus funds to start tenant-management programs at two other projects, Holly Court and Pitts Plaza West. Although the money is there, Morrison, in a series of phone interviews that began in June, hasn't offered any specific explanations of the delay in getting the program started.

"Self-management is a long process," she commented. "It doesn't happen overnight. It could take ten or 15 years to really happen."

Gillmore was more optimistic: "My experience," he said, "is that it takes a good three years for a person with no experience to learn how to be a manager."

TENANTS AND Housing Authority staff agree that training is the first step for tenants taking over management — sometimes a lengthy one. The country's first public-housing resident-management corporation was the one at Cochran Gardens. By the time it took over management, in 1976, tenants had been taking management-training classes for six years.

But the nature of the training may be another point of difference between tenants and the Housing Authority. Gillmore said the SFHA will soon hire a management company to train Alemany residents.

"What I would prefer to do," he said, "is to place Alemany under the day-to-day management of a private profit-making or nonprofit property-management firm, whose job would be to manage and also, over the next three years or so, train tenants to manage."

But several tenants said they are wary of a management firm coming in. Washington said it would be better for the tenants to have the responsibility, backed up by a training group that would be on call to answer questions. "OJT, that's the thing," she said. "On-the-job training."

"What if they get here and take over, and then they don't leave?" asked another tenant. She mentioned another worry — that public housing might be taken over and put to private use.

"You just don't know what might be in their trick bag," she said.

In fact, HUD resident-management policy is aimed, in the long run, at having public-housing tenants buy the projects, putting the government out of the housing business. Resident-management groups at Cochran Gardens and another pioneering housing project, Kennilworth-Parkside in Washington, D.C., are also aiming at that goal.

But Gillmore said selling off the housing projects is definitely not in the plans for San Francisco. "I'm not opposed to it philosophically," he said, "but the problem is with using what is an existing important resource and eliminating it as an available resource forever thereafter. The population we serve has an average income of around $9,000 — that's well below any recognized standard of poverty. Those people will continue to need quality rental housing."

But San Francisco public-housing tenants could use a resident-management corporation to develop other community facilities, as the tenants at Cochran Gardens have done. Coney said the tenants there have started a catering business that delivers nearly 700 meals a day to senior citizens and opened two preschool child-care centers. The complex employs more than 300 residents, all former welfare recipients. Coney added, "The tenants seem to really enjoy it. It's the best-run project they ever lived in, they get first preference on all jobs and we are always trying to bring in other programs that they can benefit from."

MEANWHILE, in the East Bay, six Richmond housing projects are in the preliminary stages of self-management, under an umbrella organization called East-Haciend-Strom. The Easter Hill project already employs three residents and has a groundskeeping maintenance contract with the Richmond Housing Authority.

Charles Roberts, a member of the East-Haciend-Strom Community Board, said he's optimistic about the future at the Easter Hill project: "Self-management is going to work," he told the Bay Guardian, "because everyone here is behind it."

Residents have applied to HUD for a grant of $100,000 to begin training, and they say they are confident the money will come through. "Oh yeah, the money's there," said Roberts. "The federal government wants to get out of the housing business."

Roberts said he is prepared for a five- to seven-year training process, but is aware that the Housing Authority might not be as optimistic as the residents. "Maybe they think self-management would eliminate some of their jobs, that they might not have as much power, but that wouldn't happen. It'll just be a changing of the guard, they'll be hiring us instead of outside help."

But Mabel Coney says from her experience at Cochran Gardens, Roberts is right — the residents' commitment is the key to success. "Tenant management has worked at Cochran Gardens," she said, "because the people who work with it are dedicated to where they live."

"We knew from the beginning that we could do a better job than the housing authority, just because we're here 24 hours a day, not eight."

But the St. Louis Housing Authority, she said, took some persuading before it accepted the role of residents as managers. "In the 14 years we've been incorporated, we've had just one chairman, Miss Bertha Gilkey. The housing authority has had seven or eight different executive directors. Some of them have been helpful, but each time a new one comes in, they have to figure out how things work. We've continued to do the same job no matter who the executive director is. But self-management can only work when the housing authority is in agreement that it is the best thing going for public housing."

Alemany tenants aren't convinced they have that kind of backing from the San Francisco Housing Authority, although Gillmore told the Bay Guardian he is a very strong proponent of resident management — "within limits."

"From a practical and philosophical perspective," Gillmore said, resident-management plans "do work, but they don't work everywhere and under all conditions."

To make resident management work at Alemany, the challenge for the tenants and the Housing Authority will be to find new ways of working positively together that allow them to overcome a history of distrust and disappointment.

But Alemany's activist say that, despite their skepticism, they are more than ready to get started working on resident management. The Alemany project was "beautiful" only 15 years ago, they say, a real community. If the Housing Authority will help out, tenant managers could rebuild that community.

Looking up at one of the buildings under construction, Washington added, "You have to give them credit. It's going to be beautiful."

THE RIGHT STUFF

MANY PEOPLE find it hard to believe that the minimal physical effort needed for data input can cause severe pain and even permanent damage. However, when the delicate tendon and nerve superhighway at the base of the wrists meets the pressure of constant lightning-fast keystrokes, the resulting inflammation and swelling can cause mashed nerves.

One solution is prevention — using the VDT properly, rather than waiting for the pain to force you into action.

Many of the hazards can be prevented by proper monitor, keyboard and chair position, diffused lighting to reduce glare, adjustable chairs and keyboard that let the user change positions regularly and frequent breaks allowing the body to change position, the eyes to focus elsewhere and the built-up tension to relax. Although little is known for sure so far about the radiation danger, keeping a three-foot distance from the monitor is recommended.

For more information on VDT hazards, see the articles on VDT hazards in the January and July 1990 issues of Macworld magazine.

The diagram on p. 25, which accompanied the January Macworld article, gives guidelines for a safe workstation. New equipment is not always necessary; add-on safety products are available. Although this is not a comprehensive list, here are a few locations where you can buy products that help fit your desk better to your body:

- Wrist rests, footrests and back supports can be purchased through The Gifted Technologies Group, 999 Edgewater, Foster City, 697-7672.

- Ergonomic office chairs, sitting supports to be attached to a chair, copy holders and wrist rests are available at Back Design, 614 Grand, Oakl., 451-6600.

- Light fixtures for large and small office spaces are available from Peerless Lighting Corp., 747 Bancroft, Berk., 845-2760. Although the company's emphasis is on offices, individuals can buy single fixtures.

- Screen shields designed to reduce glare, cut out 99 percent of the electric fields emanating from the front of the VDT and reduce part of the magnetic fields are manufactured by NoRad Corp., 1549 11th St., Santa Monica, (800) 262-3260, and by Sunflex, an Atlanta company. NoRad claims it is close to completing a product that will reduce the extremely low frequency emissions not previously contained. The new product, NoRad says, will protect against emissions from all sides of the computer monitor, not just the front. NoRad products are sold at some computer stores in the Bay Area, including the Computer Grocery Store, 456 Montgomery, SF, 781-4992. Sunflex products are available at Ergonomic Sciences Corp., 745 S. Bernardo, suite 60C, Sunnyvale, (408) 732-0733. Ergonomic Sciences Corp. itself has announced that within two months it will introduce a new product that will reduce the entire range of VDT emissions.

Laura Stock of UC Berkeley's Labor Occupational Health Program says laws are needed to protect workers against computer hazards because employers aren't doing it themselves.

SF'S COMPUTER-SAFETY WAR

Labor and business representatives are gearing up for battle over a proposed ordinance to set safety rules for computerized workplaces

By Elinor Craig

ON AUG. 27th, when Supervisor Nancy Walker introduced a bill to protect workers from injuries caused by working at video display terminals, San Francisco became another battlefield in the national VDT-legislation war.

Unions and health advocates are pushing for state and local legislation and union-contract provisions that would require employers to redesign equipment and workplaces to safeguard the health of people who work at VDTs — basically, any computer equipment with keyboards and monitors.

Meanwhile, business groups are gearing up to counter these initiatives. Employers fund an information clearinghouse called the Center for Office Technology. And according to business and labor sources, businesses have also established a national war chest, now holding millions of dollars, to fund efforts to block VDT safety legislation.

As in other local areas where VDT legislation has been introduced, the bill quickly drew stiff opposition from San Francisco employers. Small and large groups of business representatives have met several times a week at the Chamber of Commerce, according to Chamber Communications Officer Carol Piasente. Pacific Bell Director of External Affairs Lynn Bunim said business representatives started meeting individually with supervisors last week. Even the local daily newspapers have been "working with the business community on this issue," Tom Clancy, executive vice president and director of sales for the San Francisco Newspaper Agency, told the Bay Guardian.

"I've been in worker health for years, and I have never seen business resist an issue like this one," commented Joan Moore, a representative of the Communications Workers of America Local 9410, one of the members of the VDT Coalition, which sponsored the bill. From the other side, Bunim agreed: "This is the most interesting and intense issue I've ever faced," she told the Bay Guardian.

Eight supervisors besides Walker have publicly gone on record in support of the bill (Harry Britt, Angela Alioto, Jim Gonzalez, Terence Hallinan, Willie Kennedy, Wendy Nelder, Doris Ward and Richard Hongisto), but City Hall sources say the intense business lobbying may be causing some of the original supporters to waver.

WALKER'S BILL, like others introduced in local legislatures from New York City to Contra Costa County, sets standards for equipment, lighting, office design and work rules to protect workers against a range of VDT-related hazards, from "repetitive stress injury," often leading to disabling conditions like carpal tunnel syndrome, to the effects of low-level radiation.

If the San Francisco bill passes, it will be the first in the country. Other efforts to establish such legislation have fallen under the pressure of business lobbying.

But the impetus behind attempts to pass VDT safety laws is also strong: workers' and health advocates' concern over the enormous increase in what many consider to be VDT-related injuries (see sidebar, page 26) since computers have become integral to so many industries.

Repetitive-stress injuries, the catch phrase for a multitude of painful wrist ailments like tendonitis and carpal tunnel syndrome (progressive disabling pain and weakness in the wrist), have been plaguing office workers in record numbers.

RSIs accounted for 48 percent of the workplace illnesses in private business in 1988, up from 18 percent in 1981, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Between 1983 and 1985, carpal tunnel cases that caused missed workdays in California increased 107 percent, from 240 to 496 cases, and soared to 998 in 1988, up about 200 percent, according to the state Department of Industrial Relations. These cases include people in other work environments, like the meatpacking industry, but data processors, who are often judged on the number of keystrokes per hour, represent a substantial portion of the growth.

Walker's bill concentrates mainly on RSI and musculoskeletal injuries, but one of its most controversial provisions aims at protecting workers from the still little-understood effects of electromagnetic radiation from computer terminals. It requires employers to position no worker closer than five feet from the back or side of another computer. In addition, it requires employers to provide user-adjustable workstations and chairs, 15-minute alternative-work breaks after two hours of continuous VDT work and worker training on VDT safety. The ordinance also sets lighting standards and protects workers who assert their rights under the law.

"The legislation is primarily an ergonomics bill [adapting the work environment to human physical needs], but that is critical," said Laura Stock, associate director of labor services for the Labor Occupational Health Program at the University of California at Berkeley, who consulted on writing the San Francisco ordinance. "It doesn't address issues around radiation or visual problems. However, the San Francisco bill says the radiation situation and long-term vision impairment will be monitored, and it recommends that pregnant women be allowed other work."

LOCAL BUSINESS representatives told the Bay Guardian they oppose the measure because it is unnecessary, intrusive and too costly; some hinted they might challenge the bill in court and threatened that businesses would move out of San Francisco if it passes.

"The requirement for five feet between work stations is an area that is very costly," said Bunim of Pacific Bell. "There's no getting around it. If companies are forced to reconfigure how the computers are arranged, you could conceivably have a room that used to hold 20 computers only holding 12 to 15 workstations. Companies will have to assess whether they have the real estate to accomplish the job in San Francisco — or will they have to relocate?"

Richard Jordan, director of labor relations for the San Francisco Newspaper Agency, the joint business operation of the Chronicle and the Examiner, echoed that theme. In comments quoted in the Sept. 10, 1990 issue of the newsletter of the California Newspaper Publishers Association, Jordan said, "Well-intentioned though the legislation may be, the effect would be to cause many companies to relocate their data processing out of San Francisco." Jordan added that the proposal was an "unnecessary intrusion."

"Legislating seems counterproductive," said Bill Allen, district manager for government relations at AT&T. "We don't consider this a health problem, but a concern. Our feeling is that we can best address the issue on a voluntary basis. We want a joint effort [with the supervisors, unions and management] so we can begin to address the real issue — how you use the VDTs. Not standards related to tables and chairs. There are going to be a lot of costs related to this."

"This is major legislation," Scott Hauge, president of the Small Business Network, said. "The costs will be substantial."

Other business representatives objected to a legislative approach to VDT problems. "In the past we have been opposed to this type of legislation, statewide even," said Alan Wayne, director of public affairs for United Airlines, which employs more than 20,000 people in the Bay Area. "It is an intrusion into our business. We are capable of dealing with the VDT situation. We don't need San Francisco to set down guidelines."

No fewer than four other business representatives began their answers to Bay Guardian inquiries by saying something like, "While we do not object to the intent of bills such as this, we do have a problem with..." then began to list the reasons why this legislation is an inappropriate way to deal with the issue.

"We do have concern with the city attempting to legislate guidelines. They should be statewide. Otherwise we will have to comply with local ordinances all over the state," said Lou Saviano, spokesperson for Pacific Bell.

"By legislating these mandates," argued Piasente, of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, "it causes problems with collective-bargaining arrangements, such as for breaks. It will have a tremendous cost impact, and the fact that VDT use is different in each workplace means it may not be applicable or adaptable to each specific environment."

Across the board, business representatives argued that voluntary compliance to standards is a better approach than legislation. However, voluntary guidelines already exist, developed by respected organizations like the American National Standards Institute. And many VDT users, who often key in at jackhammer speeds, remain tethered to outmoded workstations, despite these standards.

The Center for Office Technology is an information clearinghouse funded by a coalition of large businesses and computer manufacturers. Its director, Bruce Dickerson, told the Bay Guardian: "Bills like this lock you in, rather than having guidelines that manufacturers and business can adhere to. The ANSI document exists. It has a standard on VDT workstations, which is updated regularly. If they keep it updated, why do municipalities have to do it?"

The reason, say worker advocates, is that employers don't follow the standards. At the press conference held to announce the San Francisco legislation, Becky Hogue, who works for Pacific Bell, and Charles Ward, a former employee of Delta Airlines, described the disabling wrist injuries they sustained from working with VDTs. Hogue and Ward both said they are now unable to do the work they used to do — for Ward, those injuries ultimately cost him his job.

"This ordinance calls for lots of things that would have helped me," Ward said. "Footrests, adjustable keyboards, alternative work assignments, training — no one ever trained us how to sit or hold our wrists, not even the basics. It's too late for me, but there are so many people that could benefit from legislation like this."

Becky Hogue, who has worked at a Pacific Bell computer terminal for five years, was diagnosed two years ago with RSI. "Having repetitive motion injuries in both hands means living with constant pain," said Hogue. "It means going to a formal dinner and having to ask someone to cut my meat."

Stock, from the UC Berkeley Labor Occupational Health Program, said she was not impressed by business arguments for voluntary, rather than mandatory, standards. "When they say 'We are doing it already,' that's great," she said. "No legislation has suggested a penalty for those that already have safety in place. They should be happy, they'll be ahead of the game."

"But these bills are showing that not all businesses are attending to the problems. This is a response to many workers in bad environments. There is no dearth of information about the dangers of VDTs. Quite a bit of evidence shows that VDTs, used improperly, are harmful. The risk factors for RSI are documented. And there is a tremendous amount of agreement, worldwide and here, to have VDT standards."

"This agreement reflects a growing consensus that something should be implemented."

But some business representatives question that consensus, saying it isn't clear whether working with VDTs really causes injuries.

"There is some relationship between repetitive motion and ailments, but does it come from the person playing tennis? There is no documented relationship that I have found, and I am receptive, believe me," said Joseph Koonin, vice president and manager of corporate safety and health for Wells Fargo Bank.

Wells Fargo safety officer Kathy Hart echoed Koonin's skepticism: "Is it that the worker goes home and plays tennis or chops vegetables, or is it the VDTs?" she asked. "This is not a scientifically based fact, from a purely safety and health factor. When Cal-OSHA [the California Occupational Safety and Health Administration] looked into the issue, they came up with nothing."

Hart was referring to three unions' 1987 petition to Cal-OSHA to develop regulations for the use of computers in and business doesn't want to allow any precedents. Cal-OSHA said they would come out with standards for all the workplace, not just VDTs. We don't see this as in conflict with standards for VDTs. They obviously did."

MOUNTING EVIDENCE linking VDT use with a range of injuries and health problems has sparked a nationwide push for safeguards against these hazards.

More than nine states, including California, have adopted rules for VDT use among state employees. Labor unions now are routinely bringing VDT safety to the bargaining table. District Council 37, which represents New York City's employees, won VDT safety provisions in its contract with the city. Workers in at least two companies, Mountain Bell and Long Island Newsday, have filed suits against computer manufacturers.

Politicians — including state Assemblyman Tom Hayden (D-Santa Monica) and Representative Tom Lantos (D-San Mateo) — like the San Francisco supervisors, are refusing to wait for the private sector to address the problem voluntarily. Hayden introduced VDT safety legislation that passed the Legislature, only to be vetoed recently by Governor George Deukmejian. At the national level, Lantos is conducting congressional hearings on VDT safety.

And in a stunning victory for workers last month, the Labor Department announced it would begin a major program to reduce injuries to the arm and wrist and other disorders common to repetitive-motion jobs. The first step will be for federal OSHA to seek agreements with 16 meatpacking companies — an industry with 140,000 workers and a high rate of ergonomic problems. Companies that refuse to sign the agreement will be subject to inspections and fines, beginning in January. Soon after that, the program will be extended to include 20 other, smaller, packers.

And the agency announced it would soon begin similar rule-making proceedings in a wide range of other industries.

In addition to national and state actions, the war over VDT safety standards is also being fought in county and municipal legislatures, like San Francisco's.

A VDT safety bill in New York's Suffolk County was eventually blocked on a legal technicality. But while it was under consideration, a business group called the Long Island Association frequently warned the public that VDT safety restrictions would cause businesses to leave the county. But well after the measure was proposed, a major software company announced it would move its world headquarters to Suffolk County.

Closer to home, when a similar bill was introduced in Contra Costa County, a local business coalition focused on convincing the supervisors there was a more productive solution: creating a VDT task force to establish voluntary guidelines for large and small businesses. The task force was duly created and is now in the process of developing those guidelines, according to Wells Fargo's Hart, a member of the group.

But whatever happens in the legislative battles, the cost of VDT-related injuries themselves may force employers to improve workplace conditions. Some businesses are finding that escalating absenteeism and on-the-job injury claims from people who work with VDTs have become a noticeable drain on their coffers.

The National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health estimates that each case of work-caused carpal tunnel syndrome costs an employer between

A WORKSTATION THAT WORKS

TODAY'S ERGONOMISTS recognize that there is no perfect position that workers can maintain all day. For most people, a comfortable workstation is one that can accommodate two or more positions, enabling you to adjust your chair, monitor and keyboard to fit your current task or inclination. Most people find the upright and slightly reclined positions portrayed here best for computer use. If you do a fair amount of traditional desk work, you'll probably want a chair that supports a forward-leaning position as well.

Screen: Posture always follows the eyes; screens placed too low or angled improperly are a major source of slouching (A). The distance from the screen to your eyes should be only slightly greater than the distance you normally maintain between reading material and your eyes (B). (Bifocal wearers may require a steeper screen angle than the ones portrayed.)

Chair: Seat contours should follow the contours of your back. Adjust chair height so that you don't feel pressure on your tailbone (seat too low) or lower thighs (seat too high).

Ergonomists used to recommend 90 degrees as a good angle between thighs and spine, but recent research shows that more people favor a more open posture (C).

Keyboard: Your arms should be relaxed at your side, with elbows a few inches from your body (D). Position your chair and keyboard to minimize reaches. When you change position, from upright to reclined for example, be sure to reposition your keyboard (and screen). An adjustable keyboard stand, which enables you to use the mouse without a stretch, is useful for this purpose, but you can also place the keyboard in your lap.

Desk: A comfortable desk height is particularly important if you keep the keyboard on your desk. If you don't have a keyboard stand and you work at a nonadjustable surface that's too high, try raising your chair and putting a platform or box beneath your feet. If your desk is too low, try fastening blocks to the ends of the legs.

Copystand: If you often look at paper documents when you work, use a copy stand, mounted so that it puts your work in the same plane and at the same height as the screen. If you look at the hard copy more than the screen, orient your chair or screen such that the copy stand, rather than the [screen], is directly in front of you.

You: Keep moving—motion makes the blood flow. And remember to take a break from computer work every hour.

the workplace. An ad hoc committee of scientific, labor and business experts reviewed the issues and made recommendations. Although the majority recommended the establishment of safety standards, Cal-OSHA rejected the committee's report last May.

"I was on the Cal-OSHA committee," said Stock from LOHP. "It was clearly defined who was on which side, and industry was against it. Cal-OSHA's denial was a policy decision, not a scientific one. In general, there is a tremendous amount of resistance to regulation, because this is a new area, Injured worker Charles Ward and his daughter Lisa.

INJURED IN THE 'ELECTRONIC SWEATSHOP'

Studies show a connection between computer use and disability ailments

CHARLES WARD, who worked for Delta Airlines from 1979 to this year, says he remembers years of tingling in his fingers, pain starting in his wrists and at the end shooting up his arms. Eventually the pain was so bad he couldn't open a jar of peanut butter. In October 1989, Dr. Paul Mills, an orthopedic surgeon, diagnosed Ward with bilateral tenosynovitis, saying: "Ward's history is compatible with a repetitive overuse phenomenon. I do believe the injury is work-related."

In April 1990, Mills wrote Ward a statement for Delta saying: "I think the limitations should be considered permanent. I think it is unlikely and unreasonable to plan on you ever returning to repetitive keyboard usage." Unable to do his old job, Ward is now working as a substitute teacher.

Becky Hogue, who has worked for Pacific Bell at a computer terminal for five years, was diagnosed two years ago with RSI. In severe pain much of the time, Hogue has hand and wrist braces that she must wear now while at work and while doing any hand-wrist intensive activity.

While worker advocates have directed most of their efforts at employers, pushing for them to redesign workstations and work spaces, some are also targeting computer manufacturers.

"As far as ergonomics, the computer industry has never done anything unless they have to," Denise Caruso, San Francisco Examiner computer-industry columnist and newsletter editor, told the Bay Guardian. "It isn't economically viable to do so. Industry has hired people to do studies, and — surprise! These studies showed no problem. [But] industry has money to do PR campaigns, so what they put out are the commonly held beliefs."

"Customers, the users, are now saying, 'Change what you are doing.' There really is no excuse when you see that Europe and Scandinavia have standards we aren't in compliance with." Last year, Caruso said, she herself was diagnosed with RSI.

Ward, Hogue and Caruso are just three of thousands of workers injured in what some call the "electronic sweatshop."

By now, several government and university surveys have shown a connection between computer use and a host of painful and often disabling ailments. The most frequent complaints are:

- Back and neck strain.
- Eyestrain and vision problems.
- Wrist and hand injury and shoulder pain.
- Stress-caused sleep disturbances, poor productivity, chronic headaches, nausea and fatigue.

Besides these relatively well-documented problems, a new concern is emerging over computers' electromagnetic emissions. Only a few studies have been done so far on the radiation computers produce. But a growing number of scientists believe that the extremely low frequencies, once thought to be harmless, could be the cause of spontaneous abortions and "molecule bending" that may cause cancer.

Recent Swedish studies found that magnetic fields affect early embryonic development. The National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health is currently finishing a study on 2,000 female VDT users at selected AT&T and Bell South locations. A NIOSH spokesperson was quoted in the Washington Business Journal predicting there is a 90 percent chance that the institute will find that VDT workers have 1.5 times as many spontaneous abortions and 2.5 times as many babies with birth defects as a control group not working with VDTs.

Computer manufacturers have historically tended to deny VDTs involved any radiation hazards. But in the face of increasing public alarm, they are rushing to complete research and development of monitors that either reduce or block electromagnetic rays. Industry sources say, however, that these new products are still a long way off.

$20,000 and $100,000. In a recent press conference, a Pacific Bell spokesperson said the company spends approximately $48,000 per case, and that the company had 150 cases last year. ("That's only the tip of the iceberg," commented a Communication Workers of America official.) Using Pacific Bell's figures, it appears the company spent at least $7.2 million on carpal tunnel cases alone.

According to the computer-industry publication Macworld (January 1990), 200 of the 1,100 reporters and editors at the Los Angeles Times have cost the paper hundreds of thousands of dollars in RSI disability claims and lost work time.

And in Fresno, the Northern California Newspaper Guild lodged a complaint with Cal-OSHA on behalf of one-third of the Fresno Bee editorial staff, who were suffering from a variety of disorders. Cal-OSHA recently ruled in favor of the union and ordered the Bee, on penalty of a hefty fine, to provide adjustable furniture, ergonomic training and hourly breaks.

These developments have not been lost on some businesses.

"In the past few years, I have noticed a dramatic increase in activity and interest for VDT safety," said George Bell, president of the Gifted Technologies Group, which manufactures padded wrist rests, resells other safety products and provides education for proper VDT use. "Companies who kicked me out a year ago are now calling."

In July, Pacific Bell announced an $8 million program to enhance the work environment for its VDT users, adding adjustable chairs and keyboards and diffused lighting, and repainting the offices in softer colors, according to Pacific Bell's Saviano.

But an internal company memo obtained by the Bay Guardian seems to question corporate commitment to the VDT safety program. In the memo, dated Aug. 3rd, Sue Swenson, a Pacific Bell vice president, wrote to J.R. Moberg, executive vice president for human resources: "Chuck McCreight of Marty Kaplan's staff and Jim Stout [corporate safety director] of your staff indicated no funds had been allocated, and no coordinator had been assigned. Both of these responses make it difficult for us to support this company direction." The memo requests details so "we can position this plan more positively than we have done to date."

BACK AT the San Francisco legislative battlefield, local business representatives told the Bay Guardian they had been left out of the process of drafting the San Francisco bill.

"We have been doing this [working on VDT safety] for 15 years," said Koonin, of Wells Fargo Bank. "They didn't talk to us. Had they talked to us, they would have seen we already have much in place. Besides, where is the city going to take the money from, AIDS?"

Small Business Network President Hauge agreed. "My strong opposition is that this kind of bill is put before the supervisors and goes to committee without any input from the business community, and this has a major impact on business," he said.

Walker responded: "The legislation was drafted by the Service Employees International Union, and I am carrying it for them. The business community was not excluded — in fact, I am tired of them not participating. We went through the proper channels, and they certainly know how to move through City Hall."

She added that public hearings are the appropriate time for opposition to present its position. "Either the legislation is meritorious or not. It is a very reasonable legislation," she said.

If the bill is passed by the supervisors and makes it past Mayor Art Agnos's desk, businesses will most likely challenge it in court. Legal minds at Pacific Bell, AT&T and United Airlines, among others, started pouring over the ordinance the moment they had it in their hands.

"It is an open question whether the city has a legal stand," said Bunim of Pacific Bell. "I am certain there will be modifications, and I believe there will be negotiations. Most of the companies are eager to establish dialogue."

Dialogue or not, the VDT Coalition is also expecting that the legislation will be challenged in court. But Claire Zvanski, a member of the coalition and vice president of the Health Service System Board for city and county employees, sounded confident about the outcome. "Several of the supervisors were alarmed when they found out about the war chest [national business fund to oppose VDT legislation]. But this legislation was not built overnight. We are standing firm because we believe it will stand up to a legal challenge."

The Board of Supervisors will hold a hearing on VDT safety legislation on Tuesday, Oct. 2nd, City Hall, room 228.

The official figure of 23 deaths during the U.S. invasion of Panama does not include many more soldiers killed by 'friendly fire.'

The hidden body count

How many Americans died in Panama? Soldiers who served in the invasion say the Pentagon dramatically underreported the number of casualties

By Jonathan Franklin

PANAMA CITY, PANAMA
IN A TATTOO parlor in a dangerous Panama City neighborhood, a U.S. Army soldier tells the Bay Guardian in detail how the Pentagon vastly underreported the number of soldiers killed in last December's invasion. He says the official figure of 23 deaths does not include many more soldiers killed by "friendly fire" — their own troops.

Dozens of U.S. paratroopers died, he says, in a single battle near the city of Rio Hato. "When [a company from] the 82nd Airborne jumped, about half got mowed down as they fell." He says a series of mishaps led ground forces to believe they were firing on Panamanian troops and that they realized their deadly mistake too late.

The Pentagon has repeatedly told the press and the U.S. public that only 23 of the 26,000 U.S. troops involved died during "Operation Just Cause," the invasion that toppled Manuel Noriega. But a recent Bay Guardian investigation at Howard Air Force Base in Panama City uncovered 11 U.S. soldiers who said at least 60 U.S. soldiers died in the invasion. And across the base, soldiers laughed at the claim that only 23 U.S. military personnel died in combat.

Combined with the Pentagon's latest estimate, released March 26th, that only 50 Panamanian military personnel died — and not 314 as it had earlier estimated — the new evidence suggests U.S. forces suffered more casualties than the Panamanian military.

The U.S. Southern Command denies the allegations. "We stand by that figure [23], there is nothing to substantiate a higher figure," said spokesman William Ormsbee.

But two soldiers who personally handled the corpses of U.S. servicemen in Panama agreed to interviews with the Bay Guardian. Like most of the soldiers interviewed for this article, they feared disciplinary retaliation and asked that their names not be published.

"I personally counted 67 bodies," said a private, a member of the 24th U.S. Air Force Supply Division, who asked that his name not be disclosed. During the invasion the airman's task was simple and gruesome: He scrubbed clean the bloody corpses of U.S. servicemen. The bodies were brought to the Howard Air Force Base bowling alley, the only building with air conditioning units capable of lowering the temperature enough to preserve the bodies.

The corpses, he said, arrived in bags with "dog tags" around their necks: "Some of the bodies were like this," he explains stretching his arms wide, "and some were like this," he draws a square the size of a beer cooler. Many of the bodies had bullet wounds angling up from their feet, indicating they were probably killed while parachuting, he said.

"I couldn't eat, I couldn't sleep for a long time. I knew I wasn't going to make it," he said. "I started crying." He asked and received permission to leave the detail after a day and a half. In that short period, he said, he saw 67 bodies and he is sure he saw only a portion of the total U.S. military deaths.

From the bowling alley morgue, the bodies were taken to a nearby freezer, where another Air Force private interviewed by the Bay Guardian reportedly stacked "at least 60" bodies into a single freezer.

"When the bodies started coming into the freezer, then it was for real. I started crying," he said. "They were young guys 18 or 19 years old. All of a sudden, everything you learned in the military was thrown out the window. There were no rules, no regulations, just get the job done. Me personally, I counted at least 60 bodies."

When asked about the official Pentagon figure of 23 bodies, the young man scoffed, "Hell no, I counted more than that," and, he added with a cynical laugh, "that was the first hour."

IN ADDITION to these three detailed stories, seven other U.S. servicemen and one servicewoman told the Bay Guardian U.S. casualties for "Just Cause" were significantly higher than 23. In casual conversations at Howard Air Force Base, many soldiers openly mocked or refuted the official casualty figures.

Throughout the invasion the bowling alley morgue was under heavy security and news personnel were prohibited from entering. "We didn't see anything, we weren't allowed anywhere near combat. We were shut out from seeing live people," said Arthur Lord, a producer for NBC news who was in Panama during the first days of the invasion. "I don't know of a single journalist there who saw a casualty. They treated us like garbage."

During the crucial first week of the invasion, accurate reporting was difficult to obtain and independent reporting nearly impossible. The first group of 16 U.S. reporters landed in Panama just hours after the fighting began, but they were then sequestered in military facilities for 36 hours.

Meanwhile, less than two miles away, U.S. forces battled for control of Noriega's headquarters. When media personnel were finally permitted to view the battlefields, they had limited access to cover anything but scenes provided by military officials. U.S. troops forcibly prevented one U.S. television crew from filming dead U.S. soldiers and CBS News has been fighting with the Pentagon over its refusal to release extensive combat footage taken by the military.

U.S. soldiers in Panama say they are accustomed to shoddy or incomplete news coverage of military events. Few are surprised that a basic fact like the number of casualties could be wildly misreported. One soldier, a 19-year-old from Maine, described returning home to recover from injuries he suffered in the wake of the invasion. "I couldn't believe the propaganda. My sister and mother are handing me all the clippings and I'm saying, 'Bullshit, bullshit, this is what really happened.'"

The Air Force private who scrubbed the bodies seemed resigned to the reign of misinformation. He said he believes the U.S. public should "know exactly what went on" during Just Cause. But when asked if he thinks they will, he replies slowly, "I doubt it. . . . They'll cover it up. They [the military] have got their image almost perfect."

APENTAGON strategy to cover up U.S. military deaths would have been risky, but at a time when military budgets were being heavily scrutinized, the truth may have been equally risky. When faced with a similarly embarrassing situation in February, military officials initially lied to the press and the public, stating in early releases that soldiers who were killed during military operations had died during training missions.

On Feb. 23rd, the U.S. Southern Command, headquarters for the U.S. military in Latin America, released a press statement confirming the deaths of 11 servicemen. The release said the soldiers had died two days earlier when heavy rainstorms downed two helicopters during a training mission in Panama.

Such accidents, though tragic, are common. Every year approximately 2,200 families around the country are told that their son or daughter has died while in military service. Every day, roughly six families are notified. Family members buried their sons believing the official story. There was little reason to doubt the military.

But four months later, when Knight-Ridder newspaper reporter Mark Thompson received a copy of an internal Army investigation, he discovered a shockingly different story: The soldiers had died during a dangerous combat mission. The six-inch-thick report, obtained by the Bay Guardian, meticulously describes the helicopter's mission as an "air assault" against a village suspected of hiding pro-Noriega rebels.

"We were to go into the village, seal it off and talk to the villagers, family by family," Lieutenant Scott Storey, a platoon leader, told Army investigators. "It was operational in every sense of the word." The report also states that the pilots had not been properly trained for their mission and that their inexperience was as much to blame for the crash as the weather conditions.

Faced with admitting an embarrassing reality or misleading the public, the military choose the latter. The only official mention of the mission's combat role before the Knight-Ridder story broke was buried in an obscure press release issued five days after the incident. Thompson told the Bay Guardian that before his story ran, all media coverage of the event suggest it had been a training accident. Combat deaths in Panama had been disguised.

The Pentagon's historical record of distorting or underreporting military casualty figures is thoroughly documented. The "Pentagon Papers," released by Daniel Ellsberg, contain extensive Pentagon documentation of officially altering Viet Cong casualty figures. It also provides the military rationale for such policy.

Military leaders, Ellsberg told the Bay Guardian, "feel their responsibilities are so burdensome that this is the least of their problems. They lie so often they are usually terribly surprised when they are caught. They have the sense that the public doesn't mind them lying."

The Pentagon's willingness to manipulate casualty figures in Panama is further demonstrated by its estimates regarding Panamanian military deaths. Throughout the first months of the invasion, the Southern Command reported that 314 Panamanian soldiers were killed, indicating substantial resistance to the U.S. invasion and partially justifying the massive bombardment that led to the deaths of hundreds of Panamanian civilians.

In a quiet revision two months later, Southern Command officials acknowledged to The Los Angeles Times that in fact only 50 Panamanian soldiers had died. Southern Command officials insist the error resulted from "fast and furious" action in which several soldiers claimed credit for kills in which only one Panamanian died.

Ellsberg said it was "no coincidence" that the misleading figures were not corrected quickly. "That 300 figure persisted for a long time, even when they knew it wasn't true," he said. "They wanted the military figures to look higher than the civilian figures. If 500 civilians died, that is ten times the number of military. That is the reality they don't want to acknowledge."

As the first anniversary of the Panama invasion approaches and the escalation in the Middle East continues, it is becoming increasingly clear that among the victims of Operation Just Cause were the U.S. media's responsibility to ask critical questions and the public's right to receive the answers. Had the U.S. media accurately informed the public that at least four Panamanian civilians died for every soldier killed, and that the U.S. lost more soldiers than the Panamanians, initial evaluations of the strategy and the success of Operation Just Cause may have been far more critical. ■

Celebrating the end of history

Pundits announce the triumph of 'freedom' at a swank gathering hosted by the world's second-oldest one-party regime

By John Ross

THEY SAY in the North that capitalism has won the century and declared history at an end. We receive the graven images on our cloudy TVs down here: a heavy crane hauling away a bronzed, frowning statue of Lenin in Bucharest; 27 cash registers merrily jingling in Moscow where 5,000 Big Macs an hour are now rolling off the rubber belt; the Berlin Wall in pieces on sale at Walgreen's; in Hungary, they are auctioning off the public libraries. At last spring's congress, the Italian Communist Party committed suicide and even outlawed smoking...

"The elections in Nicaragua were a very hard blow," writes the Uruguayan Eduardo Galeano, "a blow like the hatred of God... When I heard the results, I was — and still am — a little boy lost in the storm. And I am not alone — we are many. In all the world, we are many..."

They say in the North that it is the end of history, that socialism is dead and that the capitalists and their markets are free to do whatever they want. What George Bush wants to do is extend yanqui greed around the globe now that the Red Menace is on the dole and in his pocket. The end of history brings you Panama and the Nicaraguan elections and this despicable display of heavily armed avarice in defense of black gold, the automobile industry and feudal shiekocracy that has become the latest thriller-diller device to take your mind off your own problems.

We have heard this story before.

Now the end of history has come to Mexico, of all places, where history has ended often and begun again the next day. This time, the invitation came wrapped in press packets that sanctioned admittance to an armed-guarded salon in a glitzy downtown hotel where the elegant and tipico hors d'oeuvres of the country never stopped flowing. Against one wall of this crisply appointed salon were several large television monitors: The end of history was going to be shown on TV, and now the mole-stained observers seated themselves upon swank folding chairs with their leaking paper plates and their press releases planted in their laps.

What looked like a post-nuclear conflagration cityscape came up on the screen. The camera panned the arty carnage, peering at paintings that might have been scratched out by radioactive apes. A drum machine kicked in, steadily tracking the camera. Abruptly, a set of titanic dewlaps filled the TV. Then the mini-cam gracefully backed off to reveal the broad, furrowed physiognomy of Octavio Paz, Mexico's never-Nobel poet laureate now entering his seventh decade, a sainted personage in the pantheon of allegedly living Latin writers.

PAZ WAS on this schlock-art-laden set to preside over a five-day all-star wake for socialism staged in Mexico City between Aug. 27th and Sept. 2nd by Vuelta magazine, a blue-ribbon intellectual gazette that Paz and conservative historian Enrique Krauze direct and subdirect. Costs for this conclave of highbrow undertakers, modestly rubricked "The 20th Century: The Experience of Liberty," were underwritten by such enlightened beacons of free enterprise as IBM, Benson & Hedges, Don Pedro Brandy and Televisa, the gargantuan communications octopus, which reserved exclusive rights to video the dozen forums and presumably deed the tapes to posterity. The end of history is now available at your corner VideoCentre.

The press chowed down at the Galeria Plaza while the 30 invited philosopher-kings were ferried over in limousines from the Camino Real by the park, where, they say, there is more oxygen in Mexico City's clotted, infected air. One by one, this suspect collection of lean neoliberal economists, hornrimmed professional ideologues, seedy pipe-chomping academics and chubby lapsed socialists were paraded in to chat with the still-chewing press corps, which knew a free-market meal where it saw one.

Many of the invitees were of the Eastern European persuasion: Agnes Heller and her hubby, Ferenc Fehrer, Hungarian freedom-fighting economists; the hysterical Tatiana Tolstaya, said to be Count Tolstoy's granddaughter ("Russia is the saddest country on earth"); the Greek Cornelius Castoriadis, a domineering dome-headed ex-Trot; weasel-faced Nicolay Schmielov, an economist exiled to the U.S. Midwest; Berkeley's own Nobel laureate, Czeslaw Milosz. Harvard's Daniel Bell (who, 30 years ago, announced the "end of ideology") and Irving Howe, the soft-hearted social democratic publisher of Dissent magazine, represented North America at this festival of death.

Hugh Thomas, the retrograde British historian of the Spanish Civil War, came bearing lighted candles. Carlos Franqui, a snarling anti-Castroite, lugged a coffin. Jorge Samprun, once a director of the Spanish Communist Party and now Felipe Gonzalez's minister of culture, brought a rose. So did Mario Vargas Llosa, in his first appearance since being KO'd by Alberto Fujimori in the second round of the Peruvian elections.

Anchoring this luminous lineup would be Krouze and Octavio Paz. Perhaps the poet's paeans on behalf of the free market would pull some juice with the Academy when the Nobels are dished out next year.

The revendederes, these redoubtable free marketeers who buy up every ticket to every event in town, from bullfights to dogshows, and then scalp them on the outskirts of the "sold-out" event, rubbed their hands in glee at the star-studded lineup and the probable remuneration "The 20th Century: The Experience of Liberty," and their comrade capitalists would direct their way.

Only there were no tickets for the "re-sellers" to scalp. Televisa would show the 12 Vuelta forums on its Mexico City Cablevision outlet to which, according to my calculations, about .0001 of this megalopolis's astounding 20 million citizens subscribe. Later, the tapes would be available at your local VideoCentre outlet for 20 days-worth of the minimum wage. The end of history is big business already.

One by one, the luminaries were escorted into the press salon by armed federal plainclothesmen, hated "gururas," their walkie-talkies crackling incongruously amidst the rented splendor. One by one, the invited illuminati took their seats behind the white linen tablecloth to declare their respective truths to the well-fed press.

All of their brains more or less grossly coincided on the theme that Red Is Dead and the capitalist model is the winner, ergo we have come to the end of history. It's all over. No more "dare to struggle, dare to win." We can all go to sleep now.

The present government of Mexico appears to take a similar worldview. Free-market gamesmanship and the integration of the nation in a North American Common Market at the "short-term" expense of the welfare of 80 million Mexicans seems to be the economic program of President Carlos Salinas De Gortari, who is often portrayed by toadying foreign correspondents as a sort of South-of-the-Border Gorbys, carrying out a program they describe as "Salinas-Stroika." Octavio Paz personally conducted his 30 visiting sages to the presidential chambers so they might gaze upon this blazing paragon of neo-liberalism for themselves.

It pains me to point out that the party that Citizen Salinas heads, the Institutional Revolutionary Party, has been in power for 61 consecutive years, second only to the swiftly decomposing Soviet Communist Party, the longest-running political dynasty on the planet. Despite an occasional bashing at the polls, the PRI shows no sign of relinquishing its role as the party of the Mexican State. Viewed from this perspective, Mexico seemed an incongruous locale for a celebration that toasted the death of Eastern Europe's moribund state parties.

WHAT'S LEFT of the Left noticed this discrepancy. "It is paradoxical that we are having an international festival to celebrate the democratization of Eastern Europe while, in this country, an oppressive autocratic regime, sworn to impede the establishment of a democratic republic, prevails," wrote Pablo Gomez, a Chaplinesque former student leader/communist deputy, now an opposition leader in the national legislature. "Octavio Paz is a primitive dogmatist," grunted Mexico's most venerable ex-commissar, 83-year-old Valentin Campa, himself a member of Cuauhtemoc Cardenas's braintrust at the Revolutionary Democratic Party.

"I'll tell you a story," said another PRDer, Eraclio Sapeda, once Fidel Castro's bodyguard and now Mexico's best-known storyteller. "One day, the chickens thought the coyote was dead so they made a fiesta. They danced and sang and drank and even pretended they themselves were coyotes. But the coyote hadn't died..."

On the right hand of the political wheel of fortune, Paz, who has become a sad-sack shill for the ruling party in the generation that has elapsed since he resigned his ambassadorship to India after the PRI government murdered 300 students at Tlatelolco in 1968, used the occasion of the Vuelta powwow to inform the Miami Herald that Cardenas's party was "the biggest impediment to democracy in Mexico." The poet leads an annual newspaper parade on evicting Fidel Castro from the Isle of Cuba.

over the podium (instead of the screechy junk painted by Paz's wife, Marie Jose), so large did his bearded spectre loom at the funeral: Fidel is, after all, the embodiment of the end of history in our hemisphere. Thus, early on in the proceedings, Enrique Krouze told the freely freeloaded press corps that Gabriel Garcia Marquez, a magic realist Colombian author, and Carlos Fuentes, a Mexican practitioner of the same sort of weirdness, both of whom were waiting in the Mexico City wings, would not be invited to the conference because they had so often "defended dictators," i.e., hung out with Fidel and the Sandinistas.

Despite the chafing between right and left, "The 20th Century" produced few fireworks for the first straight-arrow sessions. The talking heads floated by dreamily, with Madonna often the topic of the blah-blah, at least for newly liberated types like Vitya Koretich, editor of the Russian critical journal Ogoniok. On the third day, the sessions were finally translated to a channel one could actually receive in the privacy of one's own home without putting a satellite dish on the roof. It cut down on the hors d'oeuvres, but one could at least take off one's shoes to watch these fools proclaim the end of history.

SUDDENLY, THE handsome-rascal visage of Mario Vargas Llosa was bouncing upon the screen at a roundtable entitled "From Communism to An Open Society," and he was saying remarkable things, given the closed country in which this hocus-pocus was being produced: "The perfect dictatorship is not communism," he began. "It is not the Soviet Union or Fidel Castro's Cuba. It is Mexico. All the Latin dictators have tried to make their own little PRIs. Nowhere else has a dictatorship so effectively recruited the intellectuals..." The Peruvian burred on as Paz's dewlaps dropped two meters. "It is important to denounce the Mexican case — I hope you don't think me a bad guest, but as this country is democratizing..."

At this point, the author of The Labyrinth of Solitude grumpily cut off the author of Aunt Julia & The Scriptwriter to make "a small rectification": "Mexico is not a dictatorship. Maybe there is the hegemony of one party but..." The camera began to pan the post-nuclear set. The drum machine clocked in. Credits began to run. The screen faded to black.

The next morning in the center-left La Jornada cultural section, tough-guy columnist Federico Campbell called Televisa's performance in dropping the curtain on Vargas Llosa equal to any act of censure ever promulgated by Idi Amin or Papa Doc...

The press sipped hot coffee and sucked up huevos rancheros while they perused the papers at the freshly vacuumed viewing station in the Zona Rosa. The fifth estate was awaiting Saturday morning's forum, which was to feature the suddenly very newsworthy Mario Vargas Llosa, a national bete noire that several delegates to the PRI convention, currently meeting at the Palace of Sports, suggested should be booted forthwith out of the country. Twenty minutes before kick-off time, a Televisa spokesperson strode into the salon with a grave frown imprinted upon his mug and told everyone to go home. The roundtable had been canceled. Senor Vargas Llosa had been summoned to London on urgent personal business. The skeptical press clamored for details. The doors of the viewing salon were locked. The End of History indeed...

Sunday high noon on Channel Two,

Televisa's flagship station, is punctually futbol time all over Mexico. This domingo, however, Octavio Paz, his dewlaps not quite so pendulous as Friday, was boring the frioles out of millions of frustrated fans across the length and breadth of the republic with a two-hour summing up of the End of History. He began by holding for the cameras to zoom in upon an unfolded sheet of writing paper on which the small florid calligraphy of Mario Vargas Llosa appeared. "Querido Octavio," began the note, "alas, an unexpected family matter obliges me to travel immediately to London, which will impede my attendance at the forum this morning, much to my sorrow... I have no words to congratulate you for this admirable cultural event... a strong embrace, Mario."

"There. The case is closed," Octavio Paz solemnly dictated, still bristling at the press's insinuation that the Peruvian novelist had been asked to vacate the country.

I flipped the channels fitfully, looking for football — soccer, American-style, any kind of football. On Channel Five, the PRI was celebrating its national convention in a boxing arena in the south of the city. 10,000 delegates, an amazing number of them in threepiece suits, were doing The Wave, rising and falling to and from their feet, from the top to the bottom of the Sports Palace, just like at some National Football League sellout. The cameras focused in on 90-year-old Fidel Velazquez who has headed the Mexican labor movement for the PRI-run government for the past 50 years. Two assistants were grabbing the unsmiling old man under his arms and hoisting him to his feet just at the instant the Wave rose around them.

Back at the End of History, Octavio Paz had give the Mexican Left an opportunity to reply to the autopsies that had been broadcast all week. Now an ancient university Marxist, Adolfo Sanchez Vazquez, held the spotlight. His hand trembled and he lost pages from his rambling, pitiful discourse as he apologized to the apparent victors that Socialism wasn't dead yet.

A thousand beagles were used in a Department of Energy study to test the long-term effects of low-level radiation.

UC's glowing pups

The University of California at Davis is trying to get rid of a freezer full of radioactive beagles

By John Reid

A THOUSAND radioactive beagles in the fridge mark the end of the research, but just the beginning of the problem.

The small mountain of dog remains stored in a freezer at the Institute of Toxicology and Environmental Health at the University of California at Davis is one of the more ghastly byproducts of the nuclear age. After 27 years of research and three years of cleanup planning, the dogs are set to be moved this month to a permanent storage site in Hanford, Washington — a site that would seem to have enough radiation already.

The dogs were used in a federal Department of Energy study, begun in 1959, to determine the long-term health effects of low-level radiation. At birth they were either put on a diet of bone-seeking strontium-90, injected with radium or irradiated with cobalt-60. About a year and a half later, the treatment would stop and the radioactive dogs would be sent to frolic for the rest of their days in outdoor cages.

Similar studies were done at a handful of universities throughout the West, but the $65 million Davis research was the largest effort.

What's left of that effort is a big cleanup bill for what's left of the dogs. "It really is a variety of just... tissue," said campus Radiation Safety Officer Carolyn Owen, crinkling her nose. "They're no longer warm little puppies," added Office of Environmental Health and Safety Director Bern Shanks, in an interview with the Bay Guardian.

But these are not pups that can be buried in the backyard. Federal Department of Energy officials will start transporting them this month to an underground storage site in Hanford, Wash., part of a cleanup of the Davis research site that could run up a tab of $22 million.

Where there are dogs, there is, of course, dog shit — 35,000 gallons of it that must be packed in special lined drums and gingerly shipped off to Hanford as well.

The cleanup has been underway for three years, and has included inch-by-inch studies of contaminated buildings and a treasure hunt over an acre-and-a-half area for radiation contamination.

THE INSTITUTE of Toxicology and Environmental Health at Davis consists of a handful of buildings, a few hundred dog pens and, of course, a freezer. A sense of history is apparent at the administration building. Alongside a handsome photograph of cooling towers at a nuclear power plant, there hangs an aerial photo of the outdoor pens where the beagles lived and a 1920s snapshot of the famous watch-dial radium painters, looking up from their work with brushes in hand, smiling. Most of them died young. They ingested massive doses of radium by licking the brushes with which they applied the luminescent radium to watch dials.

The beagle research at Davis was started in 1959, to better understand possible long-term effects of fallout from above-ground bomb testing then in progress. Until that point, long-term health risks had been largely disregarded. As in the case of the dial painters, the realization that radiation might be bad for you came after people had been exposed to it.

At Davis, the first beagle was fed strontium-90 more than a decade after the Atomic Energy Commission and Department of Defense started exploding nuclear bombs in the atmosphere.

Other tests had been done at the outset of the nuclear-weapons age. Troops were marched out into the desert to see how well they functioned very near to a nuclear blast. And farm animals, staked at set distances from the explosion, imploded. But not until the late 1950's did the importance of fallout begin to be recognized.

Beagles were chosen for the research for their longevity and certain clinical similarities they bear to humans. Above-ground testing stopped in the early 1960's and Davis officials claim some credit, but it is unclear what effect the nascent research had on the ban.

The last dog, D05416, died at the ripe old age of 18½ in 1986, but the value of the research — still not complete — continues to be a matter of debate.

DR. OTTO Robbie, a researcher at the toxicology institute conducting the study, won't say that nuclear fallout is good for you. He does say, however, the research shows that surprisingly large doses of it are not particularly bad for you.

Robbie, who has developed statistical models to compare human and canine health risks, says that a threshold of about a hundred times the normal "background" radiation must be crossed before people start getting diseases like leukemia and bone cancer.

"You'd have to live really close to a nuclear-power plant accident and eat the food from your garden for the next few years," to get sick, he told the Bay Guardian.

Does this mean that people will move closer to nuclear power plants or regulations will relax?

Probably not. Dr. Donald A. Cool, who heads the Radiation Protection and Health Effects Branch of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission Division of Regulatory Applications, had never heard of the Davis study. Effects on regulatory policy will probably be close to nil, NRC officials told the Bay Guardian.

Local NRC officials characterized it as one (unfinished) book in a vast library of information that influences shifts in policy.

But, said Carolyn Owen, "It has applications to routine living." Owen noted that most of the study focused on low-level radiation, making it relevant to the small amounts of radiation surrounding us in everyday life.

Shanks, who took over the Environmental Health and Safety office at Davis this summer, took a broader view.

"Part of the lesson is that from a policy standpoint we have to look at the full cycle, not just the research," he said, alluding to the cleanup problem.

"This was a massive effort and extremely expensive and I don't think it should be repeated," he said. Most agree that it won't.

But the cost of mopping up after the research is just one of many bills now coming due from experiments in exposure to radiation. In that sense, the work is far from over.

Mark Evanoff of Greenbelt Alliance: "Contra Costa's urban area will double in size under current land-use restrictions. The 65/35 plan is opening an area to development that doesn't need to be developed."

The Powers-McPeak initiative closely follows the direction set out in a proposed General Development Plan now under discussion, but mired in endless debate. It would allow for 50 square miles — an area as large as all of San Francisco — of new development in Contra Costa.

The urban-limit line would surround all of the county's existing development, about 219,000 acres. This includes 45,000 acres of undeveloped urban property, roughly half of which would have to remain "vacant" in the form of city parks or open space. The 312,000 acres of county land outside the line would stay undeveloped.

"The 65/35 initiative is kind of a farce," contends Al McNabney, vice president-conservation for the Mt. Diablo Audubon Society. "It sounds pretty good, but included in that [protected] 65 percent is all of the wetland and some of the Bay waters that can't be built on no matter what."

McNabney says the Mt. Diablo Audubon Society has backed the Greenbelt initiative. "We're not trying to limit growth, we just want growth that is planned."

Should one or both of the initiatives pass, the one with the most votes will become the backbone of Contra Costa County's new General Development Plan.

The Greenbelt Alliance measure has already survived one challenge. The Building Industry Association, based in Walnut Creek, unsuccessfully challenged the measure in Contra Costa County Superior Court last May, charging it was "deceptive and misleading."

Guy Bjerke, a spokesman for BIA, says there is a discrepancy between the written description of affected areas and a map included in the initiative. It leaves "57,000 acres in a planning Twilight Zone," Bjerke claims.

But the court disagreed, and the case was dismissed. While Measure F is roundly denounced by virtually all county representatives and Contra Costa landowner groups, none have spoken directly against the supervisors' measure. One reason may be that the county initiative calls for a review of the plan every five years. Measure F calls for a review only after 20 years.

John Ginochio, land-use chairman for the County Farm Bureau and a representative on the county's land-use Planning Congress, said he is not a strong supporter of the 65/35 solution. "But I am definitely against the Greenbelt Alliance initiative... because of the degree of rigidity" it imposes, he says.

Evanoff defends the 20-year time frame, saying it would discourage the land

The open space race

As urban sprawl eats up the hills and valleys of Contra Costa County, politicians and landowners are racing to head off a sweeping land conservation ballot measure

By Jim Nash and Tamblyn Borton

FOR A city slicker, there's a certain thrill just to talking out loud, late at night, in the unincorporated hills of Contra Costa County. More often than not, there are no clouds and no sound, save the stir of a faint breeze. With nothing to bounce off of, voices have a flat, cottony quality, making you whisper reflexively.

But along the eastern horizon, you can see glowing clusters of orange light, cast by Contra Costa's cities and towns. Every year, the glow gets brighter, the clusters larger.

Contra Costa is growing fast, and growing along with it is a debate over whether, and for how long, the quiet, open hills will remain undeveloped.

For almost a decade, county officials have been unable to draw up a long-term growth plan that balances the demands of landowners and developers with the protection of increasingly rare open space. Critics say the resulting policy drift has led to hopscotch growth that exacerbates existing traffic jams and creates new public service shortages and numerous environmental problems.

Unwilling to wait any longer for the county supervisors to give order to growth, a citizen coalition called Vision for a Better Contra Costa County is taking the matter directly to the voters. Measure F, which will be on the Nov. 6th ballot, is officially known as the Contra Costa County Open Space and Wildlife Conservation Initiative. It's more commonly referred to as the Greenbelt Alliance initiative, in recognition of the land conservation group's leading role in writing the measure.

Mark Evanoff, spokesman for Greenbelt Alliance, says he has been involved for six years in efforts to coax supervisors away from what he perceives as virtually unregulated growth. Measure F, he says, will do what the supervisors, regional planning groups, citizens committees and ad hoc alliances have been unable to do: give Contra Costa County residents a firm and coherent development rule book.

"The county's growth plan is haphazard at best," Evanoff says from his downtown San Francisco office. Under the initiative, all land currently zoned agricultural or open space would be frozen at that use. Only incorporation, annexation into a town or a county-wide vote could convert open space into developed land.

Planning decisions to date, Evanoff says, have undermined efforts at curbing new rural land development project which can now be approved without consideration of even basic infrastructure like sewers and streets.

COUNTY OFFICIALS, along with several developers and landowners associations, say Measure F is simplistic and economically dangerous. It also would take zoning power away from supervisors and hand it to cities, where citizen pressure can be more acutely focused, they say.

In an effort to thwart its success, Supervisors Tom Powers and Sunne McPeak have put a counter-measure on the ballot. Measure C, commonly known as the 65/35 initiative, would restrict urban development to 35 percent of the county, leaving 65 percent — outside a so-called urban-limit line — zoned agricultural or open space.

speculation that is causing many of the overdevelopment problems now faced by residents.

TODAY, COUNTY planners work from a plan first approved in 1963. It has been amended so often that it's no longer comprehensive, according to virtually everyone contacted for this story. Most everyone agrees that the plan's inconsistencies make it obsolete.

Howard Higgins, president of the Contra Costa County Chapter of Citizens Land Alliance (CLA), says he opposes the Greenbelt Alliance initiative, but admits that the plan in place now allows for checkerboard development, which only strains the county's sagging infrastructure.

CLA, Higgins says, "is a group of land owners who feel that local government has become much too restrictive." CLA has taken a neutral stand on 65/35.

Supervisor Powers criticizes the Greenbelt Alliance initiative for what he said was a single-minded focus on rural land. "It doesn't even address growth in the cities," he says.

Dennis Barry, a county planner who consulted with supervisors on the 65/35 initiative, says he agrees, noting that Measure F would increase density within the urban areas. Further, Barry says, it fails to address the 45,000 acres within city limits open for development.

Evanoff says urban growth can, and should be, addressed by cities themselves. But there is no provision in the current plan addressing protection of agricultural land.

"This has always been a problem in Contra Costa County. They don't define land use," he explains.

Protection of rural land is becoming increasingly critical, Evanoff says. "The urban area will double in size under current (land-use) restrictions. The 65/35 plan is opening an area to development that doesn't need to be developed."

The county may define needs differently than Evanoff. Barry says the Greenbelt Alliance initiative would limit needed development in Oakley, an area the county has looked to for new low- and moderate-income housing.

Evanoff counters that affordable housing cannot be constructed in Oakley because the cost of providing roads, schools and services would drive home prices too high. "And," he adds, "affordable housing should be integrated in the community, not stuffed away in some corner of the county."

Opponents of the measure say it would crimp the county's housing growth, and wind up costing tax revenue.

However, Measure F, Evanoff says, would leave 25,000 urban acres for potential development — more than enough space for all the housing that would be built anyway. "There is no way that 25,000 acres could be developed," Evanoff explains. "There's not a market for it."

An environmental impact report examining the two initiatives states that the Greenbelt Alliance measure would reduce automobile travel within the county by 220,000 trips a day, due to the clustering of development within existing urban areas.

The very idea of a limit, says CLA's Higgins, is destructive and a bit "socialistic." Proponents of land-use restrictions, he says, "are pushing home prices too high. We just want cautious planning with no other limits."

The rancher says CLA is neutral on the board's initiative, but its urban-limit line is referred to as the "Berlin Wall" by many members.

IF THAT is so, there are many such walls around the state. According to Barry, 30 of the state's 58 counties have established some sort of de facto urban-limit lines. The urban-limit line sends a message to the Local Agency Formation Commission, LAFCO, the county agency that regulates boundaries of cities and special districts (water and sewer, for instance) that "this land is not annexable," he says.

Jack Roddy, spokesman for the Contra Costa Cattleman's Association in Livermore and a second-generation rancher, says he sees too many barriers. "It's like the young people who have moved out here are saying, 'Pull up the drawbridge, I've got mine.'"

After nine straight years of cattle overproduction in the U.S. and four years of drought in California, the second-generation rancher sees his acres as insurance. "Very few people in this county have made a nickel ranching in the last four years, and I am one of them," Roddy declares in his home on a crisp summer night. Many of his neighbors have mortgaged their property to keep their heads above water during these lean times.

Without at least the prospect of upward zoning, Roddy says, bank loans against the land will dry up. "The properties will fall into debt, and that's when the repossessions will start." Roddy dismisses charges that many large land owners in the county are speculating on agricultural land that might go urban. "It's the American way to buy land and look at it as insurance or even retirement," he says.

Supervisor Powers says Roddy and Higgins are misguided. "Nobody has the right to develop their land unless the government provides the authority. It is not right to develop (when) it's not to the benefit of all the citizens to develop. We need to say that this isn't the same game that we've played in the past. We're sorry."

Superlist No. 503: Women's health clinics run by women

These are the days of disappearing access to health care, and, as always, low-income women are being denied the most. If you're single, of color, with children and/or lesbian, your options are few and hard to find. To aid in the search, we've compiled a list of health centers operating just for women, staffed solely by those who best understand: other women. (A few do accept male patients as well, and these are noted.)

Tied together by the idea of patient education and awareness, the staff at these centers are extremely deliberate about informing patients exactly what is happening and why it is happening before, during and after treatment. The communal belief of these caregivers — doctors (MDs), nurse practitioners (NPs), registered nurses (RNs), midwives — is, the more the patient understands about her treatment, the more she will benefit from it.

The centers vary in services offered, and in the forms of payment: Some take insurance, others can't (likewise with Medi-Cal, the state medical aid for low-income people), some ask only for donations. All are united, however, in the desire to make general medical and gynecological services available to women in an atmosphere that is sensitive to the individual needs and personalities of the patients.

While we found no health clinics in Marin County staffed 100 percent by women, Planned Parenthood in San Rafael is staffed mostly by women, and therefore worth noting. The phone number there is 454-0471. Also, some clinics do not want their hours published due to harassment from anti-abortion groups, and ask that you call for further information.

San Francisco

BaySpring Women's Medical Group

BaySpring has six MDs and one NP on its staff. There are no midwives, but the MDs do "labor-sit," meaning they spend lots of time with the delivery. The staff is open to non-Western forms of medicine. They do some surgical procedures, and do not have a drop-in service. They don't accept Medi-Cal, but have a flexible insurance plan. Call for appointments and further information on payment. Mon.-Fri., 9 am-5 pm. 1545 Divisadero, 885-8135.

Buena Vista Women's Center

Buena Vista has one MD and two NPs on staff. Methods here are primarily Western, and they do perform abortions. Drop-in pregnancy testing is available, but all other services are by appointment only. Payment is on a sliding scale based on monthly income. Accepts Medi-Cal for surgical procedures only. Payment is due at the time of visit, although it is possible to send the receipt to your insurance company for reimbursement. Office hours are Mon.-Fri., 9 am-5 pm (closed noon-1 pm), but staff will see patients until 7:45 pm. Open some Saturdays. 2000 Van Ness, 771-5000.

Financial District Women's Health Center

The Center is an affiliate of Planned Parenthood, and will see men, too. It has five NPs and one MD on staff. Offers drop-in pregnancy testing, as well as free HIV testing; all other services are by appointment. They accept Medi-Cal and insurance via patient reimbursement; call for details on payment. Office is relocating within the next two months. Mon.-Thurs., 9 am-7 pm; Fri., 9 am-5 pm. 582 Market, suite 100, 982-0707.

Lyon-Martin Women's Health Services

Lyon-Martin has one MD and three NPs on staff. Offers a full range of gynecological services, and gives referrals for surgery. The services are available to all women, but women of color and lesbians are especially encouraged to come in. Offers drop-in pregnancy testing; other services by appointment. Accepts Medi-Cal and insurance, and payments are on a sliding scale based on monthly income. Mon. and Wed., 8:30 am-8 pm; Tues. and Thurs., 8:30 am-5 pm; Fri., 8 am-5 pm. 2480 Mission, suite 214, 641-0220.

Women's Needs Center

The Center does not take patients with a monthly income over $1500, and has a volunteer outreach staff on the streets letting poor women know that medical services are available to them. The Center staff is large: three MDs, two obstetrician/gynecologists (OB/GYNs), one family-practice physician, four NPs and one registered nurse. They use Western techniques but are not averse to holistic medicine. They hope to soon add primary care to their list of services, which includes pregnancy testing, HIV testing and family planning. All are by appointment only, but a drop-in safe-sex support group does meet Tues., 6-8 pm. The center relies on donations and Medi-Cal for payment, but the staff will see women for free, if necessary. Patient hours vary; office hours Mon.-Fri., 9 am-5 pm. 1825 Haight, 221-7371.

East Bay

Women's Choice Clinic

The NP at this clinic does referrals for surgical procedures and non-Western medicine. The clinic has drop-in pregnancy screenings, with appointments needed for other services. Payment is on a sliding scale, and Medi-Cal and insurance are accepted. The staff will see men, too. Patient hours vary; office hours Mon.-Fri., 9 am-5 pm. 2930 McClure, Oakl., 444-5676.

Women's Gynecology, Obstetrics and Midwifery: A Medical Group

This center has two MDs, two NPs and one midwife. Staff uses a mix of holistic and Western medicine. Both contract and reimbursement insurance payments accepted. Mon.-Fri., 9 am-4:30 pm; evenings hours on Tuesdays. 5309 College, Oakl., 420-1200. (9/26/90)

Chef Peter Lopez tosses the dough at Geneva's, one of the few San Francisco pizzerias our critic could get to deliver.

OF PIGSKIN AND PIZZA

Good home-delivered pizza is an essential part of the football experience — but is there such a thing in the Bay Area? Restaurant critic Janet Hazen lets her fingers do the looking

By Janet Hazen

IN THE fall, when our thoughts turn lightly to very large men crushing each other on the gridiron, it's crucial to keep those larders stocked with junk food. But when the chips are down and a horde of ravenous football viewers are clamoring for a (somewhat) substantial meal, the last thing a true 'Niners fan wants to do is head off to the kitchen and cook a quiche.

The savvy host is ready for such emergencies with a refrigerator full of beer and a list of local pizza delivery spots. Not having such a list myself, I decided that now would be a good time to do some research, so I ordered pizzas from several Bay Area delivery services in a sort of cheese-sauce-dough triathlon.

Pizza is still one of the most controversial foods. East Coast pizza vs. Chicago deep dish, California "gourmet" vs. standard pizza, thin crust, thick crust, corn meal or plain...the only thing that outnumbers pizza options is pizza opinions.

Most people find a pizza they like (and that isn't easy here in the Bay Area) and stick with it. Things get confusing when two or more people get together and try to make a mutually satisfying decision about what kind and where to order from. Generally speaking, most pizza joints aren't too organized: After calling around the East Bay for pizza delivery one Sunday afternoon and around San Francisco the following Monday night, I realized that home delivery isn't as easy as it should be, or as it's advertised in the Yellow Pages. If you don't want to leave the comfort of your home and television screen, then you may have to sacrifice some quality.

What surprised me the most was that many pizzerias advertise delivery but serve a very limited area or have inflexible boundaries. Tell me, what is the point of having a delivery service if it only serves a small area of the city? It took five calls before I could find a place that would send a driver to Noe Valley. Hey guys, Noe Valley is centrally located, safe, easy and accessible. We aren't talking the top of Potrero Hill, Hunters Point or Ocean Beach.

I was most frustrated when I called Village Pizzeria: Village makes one of the best pizzas in town, and I was looking forward to including it in this survey. The two closest stores, one on Van Ness and the other in Rincon Annex, said they didn't deliver past 24th Street in Noe Valley. "You mean you can't go four blocks past 24th Street to deliver a pizza?" I exclaimed. "No, that's our policy," they said. So much for that.

Pizzeria Uno on Lombard advertises delivery in its ad in the Yellow Pages, but doesn't deliver anymore. Only a few Round Table stores deliver after 5 pm, and in calling three or four, I discovered that the people answering the phone had no clue as to what was going on, where Noe Valley was or what other stores actually deliver. I was quite happy, though, to find out that Ruby's delivers, since that restaurant makes one of the most interesting, creative and delicious pies around. After many phone calls I finally made contact with three other stores that promised to come through.

We ordered two pies in Oakland during the game on Sunday, Sept. 16th, and four pies in San Francisco on Monday night, Sept. 17th. To make the test as fair and simple as possible, we chose two kinds of toppings — one with pepperoni and Canadian bacon or ham, the other with green peppers, onions and mushrooms. The only exception was Ruby's, where we ordered a special of the night and one of the standard pies (which isn't standard compared to everyone else's pizza). We ordered only large-size pizzas. I checked the amount of time between placing the order and receiving the pizza for each store, and generally speaking, most came as promised.

In Oakland we ordered one pie from a chain, Cybelle's (654-5545), and one pie from a neighborhood place, The Leaning Tower of Pizza (444-6824). Leaning Tower pizza ($13) came in 20 minutes and was still very hot, but the crust was underdone. (It usually takes about 20 minutes for a pizza to bake.) The meats were good quality and evenly distributed, and the ham was cut in squares that were a nice contrast to the darker, round slices of pepperoni. It wasn't greasy at all, and had a fair amount of cheese. The sauce was quite tasty, and went well with the other ingredients. Herbs would have improved this pie, as well as further cooking of the dough. All in all, Leaning Tower's pizza was fine, but it didn't have much character.

Cybelle's ($15) was the better of the Oakland choices. It arrived in 40 minutes as promised, and was fairly hot. While the crust had more character and texture than Leaning Tower's, it still wasn't cooked all the way through, leaving most of it soggy and doughy. Generous amounts of high-quality meats and cheeses, plus a good sauce, added depth and flavor to this pie.

Pizza on the run: Franco delivers a hot Marcello's pie.

THE SAN Francisco pizzerias we ordered from were Ruby's (541-0795), Bella Pizza (668-4150), Geneva's Restaurant (585-0600) and Marcello's (863-3900). Ruby's pizza arrived earlier than promised — the person on the phone told me they were a little backed up and that it could take up to one hour. The two pies arrived 40 minutes from the time I called, and were hot and excellent. Made with corn meal and lots of good olive oil, the crust on these pies is almost cakey — dense and very flavorful. If all you want is good old traditional pizza, you should probably pass on this, but if you like quality ingredients, unusual combinations and a unique crust — and don't mind paying for them — then Ruby's might be the pizza for you.

Ruby's fennel sausage pizza ($18) was made with sauteed green peppers, onions, whole cooked tomatoes, mozzarella cheese and oregano. It was light but flavorful. The special Greek pie ($20), made with mozzarella and feta cheese, red peppers, kalamata olives, rosemary and oregano, was even better. These pies measure about 12 inches, rather than the traditional 16 inches for a standard large. The ingredients are wonderful — tasty, fresh and inspired. I would order pizza from Ruby's again and again.

Bella Pizza arrived piping hot one hour after I called in the order. It cost $14.95, including a $3 delivery charge. The pepperoni and Canadian bacon were of high quality, there were plenty of herbs in the sauce — which was plentiful — and the cheese was generous. The whole pie had been overbaked, though, leaving the surface cheese golden brown and slightly rubbery instead of stringy. The crust was better than most, but was still too thick and doughy. The overall taste was good: pleasantly greasy and balanced.

Geneva Restaurant pizza also arrived one hour after placing the order. The pie was hot but overbaked, with the cheese again rubbery, tough and brown. There was barely enough sauce to cover the surface of the crust, and the ingredients were placed in the center of the pie, leaving the outer three inches without cheese, meat or sauce. The crust was flat, tasteless and doughy. There didn't seem to be any difference between the two meats, the cheese tasted and felt like cheese product and the whole pie was extremely salty.

Marcello's pie met the same one-hour deadline, although they promised to have the pie to us within 40 minutes. There were plenty of green peppers, red onions and mushrooms on this pizza, but not enough cheese. The sauce was rather acid and bland, and made the crust extremely soggy, limp and wet.

Cybelle's, Round Table, Marcello's and Ruby's place the meat or other ingredients on top of the cheese, which makes the pie more attractive and helps save the cheese from over-browning. This style makes the overall pie much better; I wish everyone would adopt it.

Among our group of tasters, the biggest complaint about all these pies was the crust. East Coast and Midwestern pizza devotees know about thin, crisp, delicate crust — and great pizza in general — but it seems the West Coast just hasn't caught on to this. There's nothing wrong with a thick crust if it's done correctly: I had sensational deep dish pizza in Chicago — rich-tasting, light, sturdy and cooked all the way through. Bay Area pizza can't make up its mind as to what kind of pie it really wants to be, settling for an in-between crust that just doesn't work.

CHANCES ARE you've already resigned yourself to the idea that only mediocre home-delivered pies are available in the Bay Area, but if you want to put forth a little effort, make a pie at home and serve it hot from the oven. The recipe below produces a very crisp, light and thin crust. I like to bake the dough in the oven without any ingredients for about five minutes; this allows the dough to really crisp up before it becomes saturated with cheese or sauce. Generally, if tomatoes are to be included in the ingredients, I prefer fresh ones to tomato sauce.

You can use any sensible combination of items on your pizza, but the one basic rule is to put the cheese on during the last few minutes of baking so it won't turn to rubber or become tough and chewy. (Because this method isn't very efficient, pizza restaurants bake the cheese the entire time; that's why it's better when they put the ingredients on top of the cheese.) Fresh cheese, like goat and mozzarella, and some very soft cheeses like blue or some of the double or triple-cremes, are wonderful melted on top of the pie minutes before removing it from the oven.

Any ingredients you choose for this style of pizza should be pre-cooked or should be able to cook in 10 to 15 minutes, since this is how long the pie will be in the oven. Use your imagination for making great pizza at home. Peppers, corn, blanched vegetables, smoked oysters, clams, sardines, olives, cured and smoked meats, all kinds of cheeses, onions, garlic and leeks are excellent choices (though not all on the same pie). For best results, bake your pizza on a pizza stone, which can be purchased at major cookware stores.

Dough for two 15-inch pizzas

1 1/2 cups bread flour
1 1/2 cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup warm water (110 to 115 F.)
1 package active dry yeast
5 tablespoons extra virgin olive oil

Place the flours and salt in a large bowl; mix well. Dissolve the yeast in the warm water until thoroughly mixed. Add the olive oil and mix well. In a thin stream, add the liquids to the dry ingredients, stirring with your hand in a circular motion as you go. When all the wet ingredients have been added to the dry, mix vigorously with one hand until the dough comes together and forms a ball. If the mixture is too dry, add a bit more water — just enough to make it form a dough ball.

Turn the dough out onto a lightly floured surface and knead for four to five minutes, until the dough is smooth and elastic. Place in a lightly oiled bowl and cover with a damp cloth. Place dough in a warm place (an oven with a pilot light is ideal) to rise until almost double in size, about 1 1/2 to two hours.

Turn dough out onto a lightly floured surface and knead for two or three minutes. Divide into two equal balls, cover with a damp cloth and let stand at room temperature for 30 to 40 minutes, or until it doesn't spring back on itself when poked with a finger. Roll dough out in a large, even circle, about 17 to 18 inches in diameter.

If using a pizza stone, preheat the stone in a 500 F. oven for 15 minutes. Place the dough on the hot stone and bake for five minutes at 500 F. Remove from oven and top with other ingredients, then bake for an additional 10 to 12 minutes or until the crust is golden brown on the bottom and sides and the ingredients are hot and cooked all the way through. Serve immediately. ■ wisdom and chops without resorting to flash or flamboyance. His treatment of "Ask Me Now," in the second set, began with a breathtaking unaccompanied introduction that gave sinewy substance to the tender ballad where other players might slip into sentimentality. Some players are notable for their explosive passion, others for their sublime intelligence; Henderson, who will appear at the San Francisco Jazz Festival on Oct. 28th, melds both attributes into a unique, unwavering and riveting style.

It's about time for the band's recognition to catch up with its accomplishments.

Trumpeter Warren Gale grew more powerful as the night wore on, blowing fleet, open-toned lines across the chord changes and intersecting especially well with Martin's curved soprano sax on "Criss Cross." Vincent, who fashions a distinctive guitar sound somewhere between the cool, liquid tones of John Abercrombie and the thick sting of John Scofield, proved over and over again how thoroughly he has absorbed the temper of Monk. He was especially fascinating on "Evidence," dashing effortlessly through complicated single-note runs and taking surprising turns into unusual chord formations. A duet with Martin on flute accentuated the fundamental warmth of all of Monk's work.

Probably because it was an unusually heavy Thursday night for jazz in the Bay Area — tenor saxophonists Sonny Rollins and Branford Marsalis were concertizing in Zellerbach Hall and the phenomenal vocalist Betty Carter was making an unusual appearance at Slim's — only 60 or so fans were on hand at Kimball's. Martin made a point of singling out a handful of jazz community celebrities, including radio personalities John Rogers and Al "Jazz-beau" Collins, fellow saxophonist and bandleader Harvey Wainapel and record producer Orrin Keepnews. Responsible for Monk's historic Riverside recordings (compiled by Berkeley's Fantasy Records in a stunning boxed set), Keepnews also produced the new Bebop & Beyond album. Never short on commentary, he corrected Martin's pronunciation of "Crepuscle With Nellie" from the side of the stage.

If most of the Bay Area jazz audience's attention was focused on the visiting out-of-towners last week, it would do well to take a closer look at more of the excellent and tirelessly dedicated musicians on the local scene. The so-called renaissance of acoustic jazz in the 1980s has made it a bit easier for musicians to keep bands together over longer periods of time, but longstanding and steadily-working ensembles are still the exception. The limelight shines brightest on individuals, especially the young and promotable — Wynton and Branford Marsalis, Courtney Pine, Marcus Roberts, Joey DeFrancesco; groups with deliberately honed ensemble identities are relegated to the shadows. Bebop & Beyond has been working the Bay Area and beyond since the early '80s, and while the membership has changed, it remains solidly committed to mining a deep vein of modern American music for nothing more than the joy of the art. It's about time for the band's recognition to catch up with its accomplishments. ■

JAZZ FOR THE JOY OF IT

Local jazz ensemble Bebop & Beyond remains solidly committed to the spirit of the music

By Derk Richardson

THE NOTES aren't hard," quipped saxophonist Mel Martin, introducing "Evidence," a tricky composition by Thelonious Monk, "but the rests are a bitch!" By the time he made this remark last Thursday, Martin's band, the modern jazz quintet Bebop & Beyond, had already given the crowd at Kimball's in San Francisco a 90-minute demonstration of how the great jazz composer's complex music can be played not only with grace and passion but with an often elusive authenticity. And as the instrumentalists coursed through another stop-and-go maze, the evidence mounted that this group knows Monk.

Since Monk's death in 1982, nearly every jazz artist — and even the stray rocker — has incorporated "Straight No Chaser," "Blue Monk," "Rhythm-a-ning" or some other readily identifiable Monk classic into his or her repertoire. Hal Willner's Monk tribute album, That's the Way I Feel Now, included interpretations by everyone from John Zorn, Carla Bley and Dr. John to Todd Rundgren, Was Not Was and NRBQ. Kronos Quartet recorded a pioneering album of Monk compositions that put a new spin on "America's indigenous classical art form." Even the elegant June Tabor, best known for her traditional British Isles folk singing, croons "Round Midnight" on her recent album, Some Other Time.

But Bebop & Beyond brings something more than homage to its Thelonian renditions. The occasion for the one-night stand at Kimball's last week was the release of the band's second album, Bebop & Beyond Plays Thelonious Monk (Bluemoon Records), a collection of nine pieces, most of which are much less familiar and less often recorded than such signature tunes as "Ruby My Dear" or "Epistrophy." Choosing obscure gems from the Monk catalog could have allowed the group a lot of leeway for imposing its own vision on the music. But whereas some jazz improvisers will use a composition only as a springboard for their own instrumental prowess, B&B takes the refreshing tack of serving Monk's intent first and personal ego demands last.

Since its 1984 eponymous debut on Concord Jazz, Bebop & Beyond has undergone radical shifts in personnel. That earlier version included Martin, trumpeter Warren Gale, pianist George Cables, bassist Frank Tusa and drummer Eddie Marshall. In the current performing lineup, the only remaining founding members are Martin and Gale. Randy Vincent's guitar has replaced Cables' piano as the chordal instrument, and the rhythm section is completed by bassist Jeff Chambers and drummer Donald Bailey. For the new album, however, Cables and Marshall join in on five numbers and the band assumes mini-orchestral proportions with appearances by Joe Henderson on tenor sax and Howard Johnson on baritone sax and tuba.

Regardless of changes in personnel and instrumentation, Bebop & Beyond has remained true to an ideal of a cohesive musical identity rooted in the structure and spirit of each piece it plays. The force of individual personality, even that of leader Mel Martin, while never squelched, is secondary to the overall scheme. On the superbly recorded Bebop & Beyond Plays Thelonious Monk, this is achieved with striking clarity. There is no shortage of strong, expressive solos, but the ensemble arrangements and the carefully crafted interplay between front-line instruments — Martin's flute and Johnson's tuba on "Ugly Beauty" and the tight septet melding on "Brilliant Corners," for instance — indicate a genuinely collective sensibility at work.

Likewise, during its two sets at Kimball's, the band, with special guest Joe Henderson, balanced group and individual presence. Opening with "San Francisco Holiday" (also the new album's opener), the quintet flowed sleekly through the cascading themes before Martin took off on a fine solo that probed scores of variations on Monk's original melody. Randy Vincent, a longtime collaborator with Martin, quickly showed how an electric guitar in place of a piano can make a dramatic difference in the ensemble sound. Standing next to and locked in with drummer Bailey, Vincent pushed the harmonies beneath Martin with oblique chords and short, angular runs. Vincent, Bailey and Chambers modified the groove as Warren Gale dashed through an amazing string of choruses that seemed to be made up of more notes than Martin's but formed a flatter contour around the song's foundation.

"Brilliant Corners," with Joe Henderson making his first guest appearance, was somewhat more tentative; the players were cautious with the piece's challenging construction and Martin's solos were less urgent than smart. "OK, we got the hard stuff out of the way," was his comment at the end.

MARTIN BRIEFLY introduced most of the tunes, noting the personnel that played on the original Monk recording, observing that "Gallop's Gallop" is rarely performed and that this was B&B's first live attempt at the song with a three-horn arrangement, or explaining the way "Crepuscle With Nellie" and "Misterioso" work well as a medley. Once the playing began, however, there was nothing academic about the band's approach.

Each player had shining moments. Henderson, perhaps one of the most underrated tenor saxophonists in the history of jazz (at least in terms of public recognition), was boggling on "Gallop's Gallop," combining

SAN JOSE'S SHARK BAIT

By Bob Ivry

SAN FRANCISCO professional sports teams are enjoying unprecedented success. Fans better enjoy it while they can.

Not only are the Giants possibly leaving the city to play in a toxic waste dump in Santa Clara, but the newest addition to the pro sports register, the National Hockey League Sharks, have chosen to carry the name "San Jose" even while they're playing their first two years in the Cow Palace, waiting for their brand-new facility in the South Bay to open.

San Francisco never really had a chance to keep the Sharks here. The only venue the city had to offer the newest NHL team was the Cow Palace, which is nothing but an oversized barn, fit only for Motley Crue concerts and tractor pulls. Oakland promised a new arena, but they never pursued the Sharks with as much fervor as San Jose.

The Sharks wisely settled on the South Bay. There's no NBA team to plan a schedule around, and no other attractions there to lure the casual sports fan — unless, of course, the Rosicrucian museum decides to start evening hours.

"By naming ourselves the San Jose Sharks, we're taking a stand," said Matt Levine, a sports marketing legend who closed down his consulting firm to take the post of executive vice president for the Sharks. "The NHL is interesting enough that we won't alienate the North Bay by calling ourselves San Jose even while we play in San Francisco."

San Jose's proposed arena still needs approval of the City Council, but that shouldn't be a problem. The city is just itching to get a pro sports team.

The arena will seat 18,000 for hockey and 20,000 for concerts, compared with San Francisco's Cow Palace, which seats 10,800.

"We expect to sell out the Cow Palace immediately," Levine said. "Playing there will give us an opportunity to introduce hockey to the North Bay Area." Levine hopes to take those fans along with the team when the Sharks move south for the 1993-94 season, by giving Cow Palace season ticket holders first priority in the new San Jose facility.

Levine added that the Sharks nickname was chosen carefully. He said the fish will be an active part of the team's community relations program.

"The shark is a misunderstood animal," Levine said. "There are seven species that live off the Northern California coast, most of which are harmless, and they're very important to the ecosystem of the ocean."

"Have you ever tried a leopard shark?" he asked. "They're caught off China Basin. They're delicious."

Levine and the Sharks hope for a feeding frenzy by fans fired up by NHL action. Here's a bet that they'll get it.

ADD THESE TWO CENTS TO THE $4 MILLION: Attorneys for the city of Oakland probably popped a few gaskets in City Hall when they presented a bill for $4 million for work related to luring the Raiders back to town.

If for no other reasons, the unsavory negotiating tactics of Al Davis and his insistence on ruining one of the most serene stadiums in the world, the Oakland Coliseum, ought to have cut short the bum's rush to make Davis happy, whatever the cost.

Four million dollars! Hell, it wasn't worth $40.

Ironically, Alameda County's futile quest to bring back the Silver and Black blew any chance it had to land the Sharks. While the county was busy dealing with the Raiders, plans for a new indoor sports arena at the Coliseum complex had to be put on the back burner, and the Sharks couldn't wait.

So now they're the San Jose Sharks, and Oakland missed out on an opportunity to sign up a team that would've made no unreasonable demands and required no acrobatic ass-kissing in return for bringing a revenue-enhancing sports franchise to the East Bay.

BACK IN THE SWIM: Congratulations to Valerie Heine, Jane Willson and the rest of the city-pool patrons who created a splash over decreased pool hours. Spurred by public outcry, Mayor Agnos's office did some creative accounting and came up with a proposal that would restore the $545,000 needed to keep the Recreation and Parks Department from drowning. The bulk of the money — $500,000 worth — would come out of the capital improvement project for Candlestick Park, a fund set up to build luxury suites for elite 49ers fans. Most of the rest would come from raising swimmers' fees 10 percent starting Jan. 1st.

The proposal is still up for consideration by the Rec and Parks Department.

The bad news: The half-million-dollar bailout wouldn't keep the ship afloat more than one year. The Mayor's Office says the money from the 'Stick account would be a one-time allocation. Swimmers and bureaucrats will still have to come up with some other way to keep the pools open come next year's budget discussions.

CLIPBOARDS IN PARADISE: If you've been hiking or biking or horseback riding around Mt. Tamalpais this summer, you may have encountered something new in the pristine wild — park rangers armed with clipboards.

The Marin Municipal Water District has just completed a survey of 500 recreational users of Mt. Tam as part of an effort to solve ongoing disputes between hikers, bikers and riders over safe use of the beautiful watershed. The data gathered will serve as a baseline upon which the district hopes to formulate a user policy that's acceptable to everyone.

"Until now, we've been relying on anecdotal comments," said Bob Badaracco of the water district.

Results of the survey will be announced at a Watershed Committee meeting October 16th.

THE GOLDEN ROAD: Golden State Warriors coach Don Nelson took a week-long look at some dozen free-agent players during the team's annual rookie mini-camp at the Coliseum Arena. Also attending were veterans Sarunas Marciulionis and Alton Lister, who is recovering from a torn Achilles' tendon that forced him to miss most of last season.

Unsigned first-round draft pick Tyrone Hill also took part, which was somewhat of a surprise.

"I trust the Warriors," Hill said, when asked why he made the trip from his hometown Cincinnati without a contract. "I like to think I'm a part of the Warriors' future."

At the time of the mini-camp, 22 of the NBA's 24 first-round picks were unsigned.

The Warriors' other draftees, center Les Jepsen and guard Kevin Pritchard, worked out and will probably make the team — Pritchard as a backup to Tim Hardaway and Jepsen as insurance against another breakdown in the middle, which plagued the Warriors throughout last season.

Lost in the shuffle may be Wayne Engelstat, a 6-foot-8 forward out of UC Irvine who spent parts of the last two seasons with the NBA Denver Nuggets and the CBA Omaha Racers. Engelstat was impressive in the workouts. He's a big man with quick feet and a good outside shot — cherished commodities in any league. But with Nelson's emphasis on defense, Warrior fans will probably see him in another uniform this year.

Golden State opens the season Nov. 2nd in Denver. The home opener is Nov. 6th, when the Warriors meet an improved Los Angeles Clippers team, coached by former Warriors assistant Mike Schuler. ■

PHONE FEUD

AT&T and Sprint take their battles to the airwaves — and the consumer is the loser

By Leslie Saven

BETWEEN AT&T's barrage of cluster-headache commercials and U.S. Sprint's answer ads that giggle, "AT&T, lighten up," the viewer can reach out and call up a host of social anxieties. The financial stakes are high, and so the psychocorporal drama — all about fear of the new and dread of being made into a fool — is low.

The latest round of phone fun began on the road to Fiji. A young exec go-getter tries to call Phoenix from a phone booth, but instead gets Fiji — as illustrated by the big native who answers the phone at a tourist spot. Fiji! It's not only far away, but somehow its funny, foreign little sound makes the error even worse. The go-getter is teed off! Well, at least he'll get credit for the wrong number, like AT&T always gave him. The operator, however, refuses, saying, "You aren't dealing with AT&T." But he wields the power of the dollar and the shorter quip: "I am now!" It's the revenge of the big guy who's been mistaken — oh God! — for a little guy.

Sometimes "Fiji" arrives as part of a two-minute commercial package that includes more vignettes demonstrating how other phone companies are trying to put one over on you. There are real problems with some long-distance carriers, particularly when it comes to telemarketing hard sells, but AT&T throws them all in doubt. A good-looking gal representing baby-boomer enlightenment has just come home out of the rain. "The phone's ringing, I think it's him, but it's them — you know, those people who call you up and say switch from AT&T, we've got better quality. Like you try to pin them down to something and get some real numbers going. Well, I say, 'Look, just put it in writing.' Dead silence. And it just goes to show you," she says, with the hint of a nasty squint in her eyes and a nah-nah-nah in her voice — "it's still not AT&T."

Lines from other AT&T ads draw a most subtle class line: "Was I absent the day they gave out the big savings?" "Bottom line is, I'm not buying it." "Yaddy yaddy yaddy all day long." It's not that the actors are playing elites — they are pointedly middle-class and "regular." Rather, it's that they spray business-spawned phrases as if they were mace. AT&T's heroes are amicable people who know when to access their don't-fuck-with-me data bank. They intimidate the viewer with soft snobbery into not being intimidated by the hard sellers. The overall impression — enhanced by AT&T's obsessive, nonstop airing of these spots — is that the whole world is against Sprint, MCI and other such trash, and if you're not, you're a dupe!

Sprint's first line of defense was succinct: A woman appears in the dark, and as the lights fade in says, "AT&T has left a lot of people in the dark.... Sprint has real operators, our fiber optics make your calls sound better than AT&T's, plus Sprint still offers better overall savings than AT&T. And we will put it in writing." She glances floorward (actually, she's ridiculously

And while flouting AT&T's hegemony, Sprint's tagline — "It's a new world" — gets additional spin off the emerging political new world order. Sprint — the very name is meant to say swift and nimble — poses as nerve to AT&T's muscle.

But their latest attack ad repeats AT&T's obnoxious overkill. In a clanking, smoking, surreal factory, TV sets float down an assembly line with mock AT&T ad characters blathering about "put it in writing." It's deeply satisfying to see AT&T smacked around, but here Sprint so overreaches that it leaves a confusing jumble of dank and dour images in its wake.

What's really going on on the tube is a kind of litigation lite. Unlike the "cola wars" (which often just boost Coke's and Pepsi's sales while squeezing smaller brands off the shelves), the phone wars aren't phony. In fact, it was an antitrust suit by MCI against AT&T that helped result in the divestiture of Ma Bell in 1984. Since then, AT&T's share of the $55 billion long-distance market has steadily declined, from the 100 to about 67 percent. MCI has about 13 percent, and Sprint 9. (To maintain dominance, AT&T spends more than $1 million a day on advertising for all its products and services, including long-distance, making its ad budget larger than any other brand's, including McDonalds.)

AT&T and Sprint have both won complaints against the other's ad claims with the Better Business Bureau. The action is hotter between MCI and AT&T: Last year, MCI sued AT&T for false and deceptive advertising (one AT&T ad, according to MCI, said that MCI served only 75 percent of the globe, which is true, but it showed a globe with Europe missing, wrongly implying that MCI doesn't go there). In January, AT&T countersued, saying that MCI's telemarketers, like the jerks referred to in the "Put It in Writing" campaign, will say anything to sign you up. An AT&T spokesman says, "They'll tell people that AT&T is going out of business, or that AT&T and MCI have merged — outlandish claims." An MCI spokeswoman says that's "baloney." So far, MCI has not responded, as Sprint has, with an answer ad. A trial date is not yet set.

As to the actual price claims of the big three's ads, David Wagenhauser, director of the Telecommunications Research and Action Center, a public interest group, says, "Overall — and there are exceptions to everything — AT&T is somewhat higher than the others. But in terms of advertising, I don't think any of the companies have clean hands. They all sling mud and they're all coated with it. The ads in general do little but confuse consumers, and the confusion can lead to the conclusion that 'I'm not going to look into this, I'm just going to stay with what I have,' and that may be a mistake." And confusion, and social angst, give AT&T the house advantage. ■ coy), as if she's playing with fire, and says: "AT&T, lighten up."

The ad plays on the urge many people harbor to tell AT&T, "Shut up!" Its lightness undercuts Ma Bell's message to its zillions of progeny that it is very dangerous to go out and play.

UNSAFE AT ANY SPEED

PORTLAND GOLD RUSH

By Tim Redmond

YOU HAVE to admit, it's a sad situation. The real estate speculators have driven San Francisco housing prices so high even your average yuppie investor can't afford to buy income property.

But the Examiner has an answer, a solution for every would-be speculator who has been priced out of this city. It's simple: Go north, to Portland, a kinder, gentler town where real estate is ripe for the plucking. Let's face it, boys — we've squeezed old San Fran for everything it was worth. Time to move on and ruin the lives of a few hundred thousand dumb Oregonians, who probably won't even see us coming.

Check out the Sunday real estate section for Sept. 16th. The big headline on the front page announced "The new Oregon trail." Beneath a picture of Portland's skyline, the story outlined how a growing number of San Franciscans have taken advantage of the investment opportunities in the undervalued housing market of a city just waiting to be "discovered."

In case you missed this gem, it starts off with the moving tale of an architect named Philip Rosetti, who works in Berkeley and lives in San Francisco. Rosetti owns his home in the Mission District, but he isn't satisfied, and he's thinking (he says) that maybe he'll want to move some day. So last fall, he and a friend bought a "finely crafted 1920s house" in a fashionable Portland neighborhood for $75,000. They rent it out, the Ex reported, for $700 a month, "to cover costs."

Well, maybe. Let's look at this deal. Figure Rosetti puts 10 percent down ($7,500) and gets a fixed-rate, 30-year mortgage at 10 percent a year (that's what a friend of mine, who lives and works in Portland, just did). We're talking monthly payments of a little more than $700 — before he deducts the mortgage from his federal income tax. I'm no tax whiz, but let's figure the guy isn't using any fancy gimmicks and is making enough to put him in the 38-percent tax bracket. His mortgage interest is all deductible, which means he writes off about $2,500 a year in taxes, and his real mortgage cost comes out to about $550. And hey, tenants are a bitch, and maybe they demand a new paint job, or the sinks leak, or they trash the place and move to Topeka. He must be paying something to a local property manager. And then there's insurance.

So yeah, the guy's probably not making much of a killing renting the place to his tenants, not right now, anyway. Maybe he just wants to have the chance to move up there someday, when he can't take the intense urban nightmare of San Francisco anymore. But that's only part of the picture. As Rosetti explained to the Ex, "Even if I end up never moving to Portland, I hit the market just right." In fact, according to the story, Rosetti estimates that within a few months after he bought the place, its value shot up by $20,000. Portland real estate brokers said that "might be conservative."

In other words, this San Francisco architect and his pal put up maybe $7,500 of their own money, bought a house in Portland, got some tenants to cover the mortgage costs, and a year later they're already $20,000 richer, minimum. Not bad pay for doing no real work at all.

IT'S THE sort of scam that used to happen in San Francisco all the time. You rent an apartment here, you get used to it after a while.

A couple of years ago, the two guys who owned the building I live in, on the corner of Fillmore and Hayes, decided to cash out. They'd been the landlords for as long as anyone could remember. Lloyd, who collected the rent and dealt with most of the day-to-day building management, ran a flower shop in the storefront on the ground floor. He was a wonderful, sweet man: When I came home from work too tired to think, he'd give me a fistful of half-dead roses and a few wilted ferns, "so you won't be so sad." When I hadn't managed to pay the rent by the 20th of the month, he'd stop by and politely ask if I was "going to be a little late this time," and was there anything he could do to help.

Lloyd's partner, Howard, wanted me to move my motorcycle off the sidewalk, since he was getting cited for many years ago, it probably cost about a tenth of that. I hope they're living well on the money. I hope they're happy.

The new managing partner spent a few months painting the outside, and he brought in a plumber and a few carpenters to fix up the worst of what we might politely call "deferred maintenance." I got a new bathroom floor. The front hall got a new carpet.

Then, less than a year after they bought it, the partners sold the building. The price: $600,000 (give or take a few grand). And the next thing I knew, the new landlord wanted to raise my rent, to cover the cost of the paint.

Seth, the managing partner, was a nice guy, and we got along fine. I'm sure he put out a few thousand bucks for the paint job, and I know for a fact that he and his brother spent at least a few weeks sitting on the scaffolding in their gym shorts, scraping off the old and slapping on the new.

But we're talking about a profit of $325,000, in nine months, on a total cash outlay of maybe $50,000. Even Dick Blum and Henry Kravis would find that respectable.

I find it disgusting. I mean, other than Seth, who actually went out and scraped some paint, I have no reason to believe any of the folks in the partnership did any tangible work. (And somehow, I suspect ol' Seth walked away with more than Painter's Union wages for his hours of toil.)

So I should pay for their damn paint?

Busted toilets, oil stains, rent hikes — who could be bothered?

allowing an environmental hazard (well, it dripped a little oil). But he was never an ass about it, and he seemed to understand that I couldn't afford a garage, and that the British had never learned how to make a crankcase that didn't leak. We'd exchange long letters about the environment, Norton motorcycles, Dianne Feinstein, city budget priorities and neighborhood law enforcement. And eventually, I'd call the sidewalk inspector, and he'd call the local police station, and the whole thing would blow over for another year.

When the toilet broke, I'd go buy some hardware and fix it, and maybe I'd deduct the $14 from next month's rent, but probably I wouldn't. Every year, when it came time for a rent increase, Howard and Lloyd would manage to forget. I loved my apartment, and I wanted to keep it as nice as I could. Lloyd liked having nice people living upstairs from his shop, people who would stop by and say hello every now and then.

Busted toilets, oil stains, rent hikes — who could be bothered? There were flowers to sell, and stories to write. I gave Lloyd a rent check, he paid the local flower wholesaler, the guy at the corner store paid Lloyd for some flowers for his wife, I paid the guy at the corner store for some cold Bud, Lloyd paid him for a can of lemonade and gave me some flowers for fun... I never felt bad about paying the rent. These people were my friends.

But it couldn't last forever, and it didn't. In 1987, Howard and Lloyd sold the place to an investment partnership for about $275,000. It seemed like a huge sum of money to me, even for a six-unit building, and it must have seemed like a lot to them, too. When they bought the place, God knows how

ASK ISADORA

THIS COLUMN SUCKS

By Isadora Alman

Q: I've been married to this woman since 1983. For the first three years, every time she gave me head she would manage to "accidentally" jab her thumbnail into the glans of my penis. I was as patient and civil as possible. I told her it was terribly painful and a real turnoff, but she persisted. After three years I told her she absolutely must stop or I would strike her, though I refrained from hitting her for another year or two.

'My boyfriend keeps asking me to repeat a strange technique to increase his orgasm intensity every time I perform oral sex on him.'

When I did, she finally stopped. Now what she does is go down on me until I get good and aroused, then she seemingly loses interest and leans against my erect penis, stretching the skin and tearing it while she picks blackheads out of my pubic area, which is just as painful. Before you ask me what I am doing with this woman for seven years, please tell me if in your opinion any psycho/sexual therapy will help.

A: My first question would not be what you are doing with this woman after seven years (unless you hired her simply as a fellatrice), but why she still agrees to oral sex with you after being bullied, bitched at and battered, or why you still want her to. Yes, therapy would help, with its aim being to get this covert battle out in the open, where you both can learn to express your anger cleanly and fight fairly. At the very least it will be easier on your pubes.

Q: I am a 26-year-old female, and I'm wondering if you know how common it is for females only to be orgasmic through oral stimulation. Several girlfriends of mine say they can only orgasm by oral means, and therefore are always in need of a partner to "get off." I feel bad for them, since I know how satisfying masturbation can be, and wish they had the ability to enjoy orgasms by themselves. I wonder if they just don't have the right frame of mind. Do you have advice for them on how to be able to reach orgasm by manual means?

A: Not if they don't want it, I don't. Shere Hite's often disputed and sometimes confusing statistics state that 42 percent of her respondents climaxed regularly (not necessarily solely) through oral stimulation, vs. 44 percent who did so regularly by hand (whether theirs or their partner's is not made clear, either). I think all women can reach orgasm on their own if — big if — they are motivated to take the time and trouble to learn.

There are excellently written how-to books on this topic; Betty Dodson's and Lonnie Barbach's come immediately to mind. However, it is my experience that streams of water — such as from a hand-held shower, a douche bag, bidet or spa jet — when pulsed and sprayed against the clitoris and surrounding area, do a good job of mimicking the feel of a human tongue and would be a good way to begin getting used to a different type of stimulation.

Q: My boyfriend keeps asking me to repeat a strange technique to increase his orgasm intensity every time I perform oral sex on him. Just before he is about to come, he has me press my finger very hard just below his scrotum, halfway between his testicles and anus. This very firm finger pressure reduces his normally powerful first spurts of ejaculation into a few fine mists. He has me continue the pressure while his penis seems to strain again and again to eject semen. When I release pressure, he starts a cycle of intense ejaculations that seem to last twice as long as normal. He says the super-satisfying release is worth any possible risk, but I am worried. What do you think?

A: What you're pressing on is the urethra, the conduit for semen (and urine). The worst that is likely to happen, beyond local bruising, according to a urologist I consulted, is that the ejaculate could back up and be released into the bladder, with nothing issuing forth from his penis. This retrograde ejaculation happens to many men who have had prostate surgery. (One gets used to this initially surprising phenomenon, although at first it's something like encountering a barkless dog.) In other words, not to worry.

Q: My virgin friend recently met a man on a bus, and they've been going together for a couple of months. She refuses to make love to him before marriage, but she has oral sex. She has pulled, poked, slapped, twisted and sucked for hours on end to no avail. He says that he does not have a physical problem and that he finds her attractive. What can this poor girl do to make her man come?

A: Has she tried whistling "Dixie," would you know? This isn't a question for Ask Isadora, or even to ask you, the good friend of Poor Girl. It's possible he's holding back on purpose. It's possible that she's awkward and that it's not sensual for him. It's possible that he never comes from this type of stimulation, and it's also possible that he requires a whistled chorus of some other tune in order to climax. She needs to ask him. Sexually active people need to become skilled at oral intercourse...and I don't mean fellatio or cunnilingus. ■

PERIODIC PAIN

By Carolyn Reuben

ONE OF my college roommates took to her bed for at least three days each month, bent over with such pain that she couldn't attend classes or even go out of the house. She was suffering from dysmenorrhea, or painful menstruation. If only she had known that relief is possible with a change in eating habits, some dietary supplements and a few gentle exercises.

One word of caution: If you think you are among the 70 percent of American women afflicted by dysmenorrhea, before using the following natural remedies have a physician rule out medical conditions like cancer, endometriosis, pelvic inflammatory disease and anatomical defects, all of which could be causing this kind of pain. In most cases, however, no such structural cause can be found.

The Chinese, who regard blood stagnation as a contributing factor to menstrual cramps, still use the herb mugwort in a treatment called moxibustion.

Back in Hippocrates' day, dysmenorrhea was blamed on "stagnation of menstrual blood." (After delivery of a child, women were frequently relieved of menstrual cramps. The physicians of ancient Greece assumed that the increase in blood supply to the uterus that persists after pregnancy helps to provide enough oxygen and nutrients to the uterine muscle to prevent cramping.) Hippocrates suggested that women crouch bare-bottomed over a steaming pot of sweet wine, fennel seed and root and rose oil.

Herbal remedies are still popular around the world. The Chinese, for example, who regard blood stagnation as a contributing factor to menstrual cramps, still use the herb Artemisia vulgaris (mugwort) in a treatment called moxibustion. (Slow-burning paper "moxa sticks" are held near the woman's abdomen to warm the skin and help stimulate blood circulation.) Remedies popular among Western herbalists include teas of raspberry leaf, chamomile or...crampbark (Viburnum opulus).

Among the causes of menstrual cramping recognized by Western doctors are mineral deficiencies, especially of calcium and magnesium (both considered natural tranquilizers). Lack of magnesium can lead to muscle spasms and inefficient calcium use, even when adequate calcium is being consumed. (Calcium, in turn, is also needed for proper neuromuscular function.) In addition, magnesium helps the body use other vitamins, like C, B-complex and E.

Every tissue in the body contains hormone-like substances called prostaglandins. Those that affect the smooth muscles (as well as the flow of blood) in the uterus are called PGE-1, PGE-2, PGF-1 and PGF-2. While the last three prostaglandins can actually cause cramping, PGE-1 is a major cramp eliminator. It relaxes smooth muscles like those in the uterus walls and around blood vessels, and also reduces inflammation.

Prostaglandins are formed in every organ from essential fatty acids stored therein. For cramp relief, the most important essential fatty acid is linoleic acid, because it is converted (with the help of certain nutrients) to PGE-1. Linoleic acid is found in significant amounts in safflower, linseed, borage and evening-primrose oils.

You can eliminate menstrual cramps without drugs, side effects or visits to your physician's office by manipulating your dietary intake of substances rich in the raw materials that create PGE-1. Throw out margarine, lard, red meat and the hydrogenated oils in your cupboard, and use cold-pressed polyunsaturated oils (like safflower) for salad dressings. Take evening-primrose, borage or linseed oil capsules for at least three months. In addition, you can take supplements of magnesium, vitamin B-6 complex, zinc, vitamin C and niacin. These nutrients are used by the body to transform linoleic acid to gamma linoleic acid (an intermediary step), and then to the cramp-reliever PGE-1.

In short, the goal of therapy for menstrual cramps is to reduce the manufacture of the three muscle-contracting prostaglandins and increase production of the muscle-relaxing prostaglandin. If your physician has prescribed "prostaglandin-inhibitor" drugs (also called NSAIDS) for you in the past, you know that they are miracle pain-relievers. However, they inhibit all the prostaglandins, including PGE-1.

In our book Essential Supplements for Women (Putnam, $9.95), Santa Monica general practitioner Joan Priestley and I recommend starting with somewhat low dosages of dietary supplements, then raising them as needed, up to but no higher than the following amounts:

Magnesium: up to 800 milligrams; calcium: up to 1,000 mg; elemental zinc: up to 50 mg; evening-primrose, borage or linseed oil: up to eight capsules daily; vitamin E: up to 1,000 IU; vitamin-B complex: no more than 100 mg of each of the major Bs.

*Carolyn Reuben is a health educator and journalist who specializes in prevention and self-care, and has been health editor of the L.A. Weekly for the past seven years. She is co-author of Essential Supplements for Women, a guide to healing common medical conditions using nutrition and supplements, recently published by Putnam.*

DINING

Chef and proprietor Eunice Taylor often comes out of the kitchen to chat with diners.

SIMPLY BRAZILIAN

Eunice's offers hearty Brazilian fare in a homey, no-fuss atmosphere

By Janet Hazen

EUNICE'S IS A gem. This tiny neighborhood dinner house combines a warm atmosphere with excellent food and fantastic prices, and has attracted a loyal clientele. Folks in the neighborhood often stop by here for a hearty meal, but after dining there twice it's clear to me that many people must also come from outside the neighborhood. I can see why: The food is consistent, portions are large and the feeling is homey, comforting and casual. There's no pretense, no fuss, no hurry — a meal at this Mission District restaurant is ultimately relaxing.

When Eunice Taylor, head chef and proprietor, is cooking, she often sneaks out of the kitchen to chat with diners and see how things are going. A native of Brazil, Eunice opened her namesake restaurant five years ago and introduced authentic Brazilian food to the city in a very quiet way.

Brazilian cuisine draws inspiration from many cultures, and one can see German, Middle Eastern, Italian and French influences in several traditional dishes. We started with a Middle Eastern appetizer of quibe ($1.50), made with ground beef and cracked wheat formed into oval shapes and deep-fried. They were great with a spicy tomato salsa, as were bolinho de bacalhau ($1.50), codfish and potato croquettes. I only wish both had been served hotter. The traditional black Brazilian beer, Xingu ($5.50), served in a 21 1/2-ounce bottle, puts Guinness to shame, and is just heavenly with much of this food.

Muqueca de peixe ($9.95), sauteed red snapper served in a very rich and buttery-tasting sauce made with coconut milk, nuts and baby shrimp, was as tender and perfect as can be. The fish came with wonderful rice and bright green ribbons of collard greens that had been sauteed in a very hot skillet.

The traditional and popular feijoada

($7.95), the national dish of Brazil, was also flawless, and ample. A piping-hot small casserole dish came filled to the top with melt-in-your-mouth black beans combined with chunks of spicy sausage and small pieces of what was described as smoked spareribs, although they actually tasted and looked like ham hock. In any event, the sultry, smoky flavors of both meats penetrated the beans and made for a sensational stew — hearty and very filling. This entree is served with the same rice and collard greens, and a small ramekin of toasted and ground yucca root seasoned with herbs and garlic.

Our second meal began with a small, savory pastel ($1.25), or meat pie. The kitchen was out of chicken pastels, but the beef was very good, and the dough was flakey and tasty. Hearts of palm salad ($3.95), made with lettuce, red cabbage, carrots and baby cucumbers, was dressed with a creamy yet tangy vinaigrette — a secret recipe created by Eunice.

Bobo de camarao ($9.95), shrimp cooked in a thick and luscious sauce made with coconut milk, yucca root and cashews, was garnished with green onions and served on a bed of rice. The shrimp was tender and sweet, but my partner and I wished the cashews had been toasted for added flavor and texture. Chicken Ipanema ($8.95), simmered in both beer and wine, can be ordered in degrees of spiciness, so we asked for extra heat. Very tender dark meat and typically less moist breast of chicken were served piping hot in a very unusual sauce that was balanced and spicy without being overpowering. Rice and broccoli accompanied the half chicken.

Eunice's also offers a vegetable plate served with black beans for $6.95. If the big, black beer of Brazil is too much for your palate, you can order a lighter, more refreshing Brazilian beer called Brahma Chopp ($1.85), or tropical juices.

House-made sweet potato pie

($1.75), served warm and tasting of nutmeg, cinnamon and allspice, wasn't overly sweet, but the crust was a bit soggy. Sundae carioca ($2.25), strawberry ice cream served with candied guava fruit and flaked almonds, was refreshing and pleasant, but next time I want to try the black bean pie or the coconut/caramel custard.

Our delightful, informative and mild-mannered server was a breath of fresh air. There is nothing to criticize about Eunice's: It's simple restaurant with a hard-working staff that serves food with heart, soul and grace. ■

DEATH WARRANT

Even with karate king Jean-Claude Van Damme as an undercover cop assigned to a prison to investigate a series of mysterious in-house murders, it's not easy to marshal your thinking arts and figure out what's going on in Deran Serafian's movie. Van Damme's contact with the outside world is lawyer Cynthia Gibb, who poses as his wife, and his only friend is prison inmate Robert Guillaume. It's bad enough that Van Damme has to contend with sadistic guard Art La Fleur, but when old enemy, almost unkillable mass murderer "Sandman" (Patrick Kilpatrick, who doesn't put people to sleep by throwing sand in their eyes) shows up, Van Damme's doubly damned. Nastinesses abound, but the dialogue and plot are so ludicrous and confusing that the film becomes downright laughable. The only clear message seems to be that the filmmakers just don't give a Damme and will do anything for kicks. (Presidio, SF; California, Berk.; Century, Oakl.)

GOODFELLAS

Good fellas? Not if you cross them, as witness the opening, searingly savage scene. Then, via voiceover, Ray Liotta tells you what it's like being raised by mobsters, and Jewish Lorraine Bracco tells you what it's like being married to one. Liotta loves the life's rituals and power, despises the nine-to-five "outsider" and unquestioningly observes the rigid "family" rules, and it's this 30-year yet intimate look at Mafia inside life that makes Martin Scorsese's film so gripping. It's stressed that the gangster's primary job is to make money, not to kill, but some of the slaughters are sickeningly vicious, their shock value increased by their suddenness. Highly respected gangster Robert DeNiro, whose snake-eyed smile covers a feral ferocity, runs the show for reclusive Mafia Don Paul Sorvino, who's superb, and Liotta's right up there with them both. At 2-1/2 hours the film's overlong, and it's repetitive, but its detailed look at anomalous life is unforgettable. (Coronet, SF; Grand Lake, Oakl.)

WHITE HUNTER, BLACK HEART

In the '50s, writer Peter Viertel went to Africa with director John Huston to help scriptwrite The African Queen, and wrote the book about it on which this movie's based. Judging by the results, producer/director/actor Clint Eastwood's concentrated on being Huston and let the rest of the film take care of itself. A mistake, because although he struggles hard with a Huston edifice complex and mostly delivers the revealing, honed-to-fit-Huston dialogue well, it's still hard to forget he's Clint Eastwood. And when some lines are uttered for effect and just lie there, the film momentarily dies. Jeff Fahey isn't an effective enough fictional Viertel foil, and although there are some suitably stunning shots, one never feels one is in Darkest Africa, though Eastwood does give the impression that Huston's emotional hide's on a par with the pachyderm's he's obsessed with killing. Perhaps a more accurate title might have been White Hunter, No Heart. (Galaxy, SF)

It was storming inside and out Sat/23 at the speakeasy beneath Spike's Cafe. "Rats Leaving a Sinking Ship," the title of this night of performance and music, was nicely illustrated by a crushed rat on a stick that whirled around and around behind the performers. Terry Weist told us about the dayglo tourists and the fascist MPs she saw when she went down to Ensenada. Steven Sciscenti, in a fable of food surprises, lovingly tended a garden of hanging fish that he painted and set spinning in a new take on Jackson Pollock splatterings. When he cut open melons to reveal the little flowers he had hidden inside, we all oohed and aahed. The three members of Ovarian Trolley came on last, and proceeded to detonate the kind of garage-band noise that used to mean so much in high school — and that's a compliment, really.

Underground, where it's overheated, is where owner Dennis is planning to put performance and cal events. This end he hosts a songwriters showcase. 255-1392 for more information. (HM)

AFTER DARK

THE BACK ROOM IS GONE, LONG LIVE THE BACK ROOM!

On Tues/18, the back room at the Albion was more crowded than it's ever been, and more stuffy and unpleasant than any other concert in recent memory. And yet we were stricken with nostalgia rather than oxygen deprivation — now that this small, cramped, permit-less closet in back of the Albion is (sob) no more. But what a goodbye it was! Nerd-rock heroes Ed's Redeeming Qualities had the audience singing along to one of their best-loved songs, "She was pegged in the head with a lawn dart." X-Tal had people making small, dance-like movements — which was about all you could do, considering that we were packed in like sardines — to "Old Colonials." Chuck Prophet and Stephanie Finch closed the party, but it was Sydney Merrit singing "Electricity is my friend" that was the high point for me. Bands are now playing the front room — but there's still no room like the back.

New motherhood hasn't dampened Susie Bright's "adventurous lesbian" following. A book signing on Wed/19, brought Bright, with her black chiffon dress, high heels and white puff pastry of a cap, plus a crowd of allies, to the usually sober environs of Old Wives Tales bookstore for a signing and discussion of Susie Sexpert's Lesbian Sex World. Her soft-spoken but cutting treatises on politics, sex and denial in the lesbian world ended with a hopeful conclusion: "The dam (so to speak) has broken," and the revolutionary flood, apparently, should wash away any tight-mouthed, self-censoring blocks. Fashion and lifestyle tips for the newest sexual revolution? Deviance is in, fat is sexy and "queer" is the gay self-identity phrase of choice. (SG)

A DAPPER BRANFORD MARSALIS began his set Thurs/20 saying, "This is one of the few times I can play a gig and get a lesson in the same night." Then the young saxist and his quartet cooked through an hour or so of their own history lesson, covering artists like Coltrane, Wayne Shorter and Ellington with such telepathic ensemble playing that you almost forgot about the sax colossus who inspired Branford's introductory quip.

Almost, that is, because every subsequent mention of "Newk" seemed to send a visible wave through the audience. And when the man finally walked on stage...well, that was it. Branford who?

Sonny Rollins, whom many consider the greatest tenor saxophonist alive, is also damn near the most impressive human being — never mind musician — I've ever seen on a stage. The bearish, bearded master played with such vitality — bouncing around the stage, swinging his horn up and down and playing swooping lines that were also somehow hummable — that the brilliance of his melodic innovations seemed almost secondary. As he galloped his way through his trademark mix of standards and calypsos, his gruff, jolly tone, as distinctive as anyone's in jazz, made an adventure out of every song he touched, even the corny "Tennessee Waltz."

The one question that much of the audience seemed to have was: Why didn't the two play together, trade choruses or fours or something? Since Marsalis even plays a duet with Rollins on his new album, Rollins' late-set romp through the historic "Tenor Madness" — famous for the solo trading with John Coltrane — seemed strangely taunting. At what seemed to me like such a historic event, I expected a more perspective-setting, jazz-then-and-now finish. But then again, Marsalis's modest deference to Newk is hard to fault. (CN)

the blues sounds of the Mississippi Delta in small clubs all over the country.

When Hammond performs it's like this: The room is dark. He sits alone on stage under a solitary spotlight, tapping out a beat with his boot on the hardwood floor. Then he starts playing the acoustic guitar that's sitting on his lap and the harmonica in the rack around his neck, bending and stretching the notes soulfully like he's a whole gospel choir up there on stage. Then he howls and growls and scowls and slips from a low, gravelly voice to a sweet tenor and back again, effortlessly. He sings Delta blues standards — songs about losing a lover, songs about leaving a lover and, always, songs about coming home.

Hammond is as passionate a Delta blues musician as they come. The shade of your skin has nothing to do with the shade of your soul. (MD)

Neil Young and Crazy Horse Reunite: Ragged Glory Disc One of Their Best

By Brett Milano

Neil Young has reunited with Crazy Horse and released one of the best records he's ever made. Granted, not every Young fan will go wild over Ragged Glory (Reprise). If your favorite album was Harvest or Comes a Time, it might send you running for ear-plugs. But if you loved "Cinnamon Girl," side two of Rust Never Sleeps and all of Re'ac'tor, then this is the album you've been waiting about ten years for.

Young parted company with Crazy Horse in 1986. They had split before, but this time, apparently, for good. Young announced that his new band, the Bluenotes would be the keeper. Crazy Horse responded with an album called Left for Dead.

So what brought them together? "It was too much fun to miss," Young explains. He caught the bug while combing through old tapes for a massive retrospective boxed set, originally called Decade II and still set for release next year. "I had seen everything we did together, and that made me want to play again. All these records (with Crazy Horse) are mile-stones, they're all related. The records in between go off in one direction or another, but it always comes back to this. So it was time to come back to this."

Ragged Glory sounds like one of Young's most positive statements. There's a couple of reassuring love songs and the tongue-in-cheek humor of "Fin' Up", which he swears is being considered for a single. "It will certainly be a video. Maybe we'll do something digitally with the vocal so they can play it."

NEIL YOUNG

Young considers this album the emotional flipside to Tonight's the Night—the harrowing 1975 LP inspired by the OD of original Crazy Horse guitarist Danny Whitten. "I still laugh when I hear that record. That's how I always react to records that blow peoples' minds—if I can laugh when I'm listening, I love it. When I'm in the right headspace, that one still sounds good."

"I think Ragged Glory may stand alone in my work the same way Tonight's the Night does. It's very positive but it has the same edge. Both sides are represented in this one, and they kind of vibrate. There isn't one record I've made that this one can't stand up beside. I'm expecting people to bring it back to the store, because they'll feel guilty about getting so much on one record."

Houston Blues Vets Supercharge Gulf Coast Blues

Gulf Coast Blues, Vol. 1 (Black Top) features veteran Houston blues talents that include saxophonist Grady Gaines, Joe "Guitar" Hughes, pianist/songwriter Teddy Reynolds, Anson Funderbaugh and Crescent City bass great George Porter, Jr. But the big find is the husband/wife team of Clarence Hollimon and Carol Fran. Hollimon is an excellent guitar stylist, but Fran is a virtuosic, supercharged singer with impressive credentials.

West Coast harmonica hero William Clarke's sixth recording, Blowin' Like Hell (Alligator), should turn his underground buzz into wide acclaim. He's a fine songwriter and vocalist but his hurricane-force harmonica carries the show.

Way Down South (Antone's) is legendary blues guitarist Matt Murphy's first solo album; a basic sampler of his wide range of styles, from razor-sharp slide work to sizzling shuffles.

Koerner, Ray and Glover introduced countless fans to acoustic folk blues in the early '60s. Now, Dave "Snaker" Ray and Tony Glover have returned with Ashes in my Whiskey (Rough Trade), their first studio recording in 25 years. The dozen tunes feature Ray's bedrock blues voice, deceptively simple guitar and Glover's thoughtful harp, recalling an era of front porch storytelling blues popularized by Sonny Terry and Brownie McGhee. ■

REISSUES

Rarest Elvis and Vintage C&W for Collectors

In 1953 Elvis Presley plunked down four bucks and cut two songs as a gift to his mother. Long thought lost, those acetates turned up with a childhood friend two years ago. "My Happiness" leads off The Great Performances (RCA) and offers a glimpse at Elvis' emerging talent. RCA has saved the second side for another disc.

Rhino Records is amassing a commendable vintage country music catalog. Its recent Billboard Top 10 Country Hits series features classics like George Jones' "White Lightning" (1959), Marty Robbins' "El Paso" (1960), Faron Young's "Hello Walls" (1961), Hank Snow's "I've Been Everywhere" (1962) and Skeeter Davis' "The End of the World" (1963). You also get the first taste of Buck Owens' great Capitol hits on CD.

Other stuff: Super K's Bubblegum Explosion (Sequel) is a 24 track collection of hits by the 1910 Fruitgum Company and Ohio Express. EMI's "Legendary Masters" series now includes My Blue Heaven—The Best of Fats Domino, the first decent U.S. Fat Man CD anthology.

Need a great Halloween collection? Try DCC Compact Classics' Monster Rock 'n' Roll Show, featuring "The Monster Mash," Bo Diddley's "Bo Meets the Monster," Screamin' Jay Hawkins' "Feast of the Mau Mau" and more, including bits from classic horror movies. ■

NEW AGE

The Ambience and Melodic Grace of the Sufis

VC's immaculate digital exposition, Mystic Flutes of the Sufis, has the ambience, melodic grace, transcendental beauty and supreme sense of reflection that have become tenants of the new age genre. The breathy ruminations of the ney whisper seductively of long-forgotten secrets and esoteric knowledge. It's like listening to a mirage.

Cellist Bob Kindler has long been fascinated by Indian, South Pacific, jazz and classical music. He merges all these styles on his captivating new release, Tiger's Paw (Global Pacific). The musicianship and compositional vitality displayed on this album are impressive.

Western artists John McLaughlin and Carlos Santana have embraced Sri Chinmoy's musical approach to spirituality. Swiss multi-instrumentalist Alap Jetzer has also been inspired by Chinmoy's artistic vision. Using electronics as a contrasting background for guitars, flute, tabla, harmonium, shruti and drone instruments, Jetzer deftly interprets Chinmoy compositions The Source of the Music and Eternity's

Sunrise (Heart Music, cassette only). The music flows with serene melodies that combine a joyful sense of spiritual awakening with pristine and inventive instrumental technique. Heart Music also features Chinmoy himself on the introspective Flute Music Meditations and The Dance of the Light.

WORLD MUSIC

Invigorating Sounds from the Corners of the Globe

Willie Colon revolutionized Latin music in the '60s. His new album, Color Americano (CBS Discos), with its real life tales of love and sorrow, looks at the ironic racism American Latinos face in their home country, and at the problem of homeless and abused children that roam big city streets.

Kotoja's self-produced debut, Freedom is what Everybody Wants (Inner Spirit), is a wild hybrid of Afro/Caribbean styles like highlife, juju, soca and reggae.

Also recommended: Pop Rai and Rachid Style - Rai Rebels, Vol 2 (Earthworks), featuring tracks by Algerian stars Cheb Khaled and Cheb Sahraoui; Mama Mosanbiki (Realworld) by Mozambique's Eyuphuro, a beautiful collection of songs ranging from gentle acoustic chants to Congolese rhumba; Yan, a disc of soothing Chinese folk by The Guo Brothers & Shung Tian and Ya Habib, a collection of Qawwalis from The Sabri Brothers, Pakistani practitioners of trance inducing devotional music.

Three discs which will appeal to folk, new age and world music fans are Desert Dance by Native American flautist R. Carlos Nakai; Recurring Dream by Sylvan Grey, a woman who plays the kantele, a traditional Finnish zither and Fire Dance, a fusion of Turkish, Middle Eastern and jazz styles by Brian Keane and Omar Faruk Tekbilek.

Doug Holsclaw: If he hurts you, it's not his fault.

Rap Happy

Check it out: Boogie Down Productions played with D-Nice and Boo Yaa Tribe at the Berkeley Community Theater on Sept. 20th. I arrived too late for the Tribe, but caught BDP member D-Nice in the act as he performed bits and pieces from his recent chartbusting solo album. Now, I like Call Me D-Nice as much as the next dance fiend, but the crotch-grabbing Derrick Jones lacked a little stage presence. It's hard when you're just one man with a mike and the smoke machines are going full blast, but the crowd, which rushed immediately into the aisles to dance, didn't seem to mind.

D-Nice also rapped a few lines from "Self Destruction," the Stop-the-Violence gold single that he coproduced. Ironically, after his performance an announcer came on stage to warn the crowd to cool down because "two people have already been injured, and one might not make it." "Self Destruction," a song about black-on-black violence that united opposite ends of the rap spectrum, from Eazy-E to Digital Underground, soared to the top of the charts after being released last year. Unfortunately, rap concerts have a long way to go before they shed their violent image — exiting concertgoers were greeted by the sight of little clumps of policemen outside the theater.

Even though they were only on stage for about half an hour, BDP got the place shaking with songs from their new album Edutainment (Jive/RCA), which continues the BDP tradition of preaching knowledge and self-respect — on the dance floor. KRS-One, the grandmaster of rap that's good for ya, told the crowd, "You're intelligent" and then launched into songs like "Love's Gonna Get'cha." OK, OK — but don't get the idea that listening to BDP is like eating your vegetables — it's positive funkiness that counts.

Although it was nice to see rap in a smaller venue than Shoreline monster shows like the Summer Sizzler, the "community" feeling in the theater was marred both by the violence and the long wait between bands. A little more security on the floor and a little more music could have made this the kind of edifying rap show that KRS-One keeps talking about.

Cabaret Returns

What was once a bright hope on the horizon becomes a reality next week, when Josie's Cabaret & Juice Joint opens its doors. Run by the same people as the Valencia Rose (1981-1985), Josie's will provide a venue for a variety of comedy and musical acts, principally lesbian and gay entertainers. There will be 8 pm shows nightly, with 10 pm late shows on Friday and Saturday nights and a 4 pm Sunday afternoon music series.

Josie's October calendar includes the West Coast debut of New York's hottest new act, "Funny Gay Males," Oct. 3rd-

7th; singer Samm Gray Oct. 10th, 17th and 24th; a new solo show by Doug Holsclaw, Don't Make Me Say Things That Will Hurt You, Oct. 11th-21st; an old solo show by Terry Baum, One Fool, or How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Dutch, Oct. 25th-Nov. 18th; Laurie Bushman and Kelly Kittell in A Man and a Woman: A Lesbian and Gay Comedy Montage Oct. 19th and 26th; Over Our Heads, a four-woman improvisational troupe, Oct. 12th; and concerts by the Crysanthemum Ragtime Band Oct. 14th, Gwen Avery Oct. 21st and the Jesters Oct. 28th.

Returning Valencia Rose traditions include Gay Comedy Open Mike on Monday nights beginning Oct. 8th and all-star Gay Comedy Nights each Saturday at 10 pm starting Oct. 13th. The Oct. 2nd opening show pairs comics Paul Krassner and Tom Ammiano in a benefit for Ammiano's San Francisco school board campaign. Except for the benefits, cover charges range from $4 for the open mike nights to $10 for the highest-priced shows.

Beer and wine will eventually be added to the juices and vegetarian foods on the menu; smoking is never permitted. In walking distance from Castro residents, Josie's urges others to take public transportation, but provides discounted parking at the nearby Market/Noe garage.

Josie's Cabaret & Juice Joint is at 3583 16th St., just off Market, in San Francisco. For reservations or more information call 861-7933.

Call It A Project

A group of local artists is crying out for reform of public housing in an untraditional exhibit exposing the grim reality of the city's housing projects. The Crack House is the White House — Public Housing: Who's in Control?, an installation currently on exhibit at San Francisco's Capp Street Project/AVT (270 14th St. near Mission, SF) through September 29th, takes the viewer through a narrow, labyrinthine hall where screen windows and graffitied walls re-create the mood of public housing. Integrated within this is a cacophonous and eclectic assembly of video segments, news clippings, government documents, rap music and oil paintings, all of which cast light on the urgent problems facing project tenants locally and nationwide.

In an effort to communicate these issues to the community at large, the show's originators, Pete Byrne, Stacey Evans, Toni Lane and Todd Edelman, all members of Artists' Television Access (ATA), attended housing authority meetings, videotaped anti-homelessness rallies and linked up with public housing residents.

"Our goal," said Byrne, "is to get people in the projects, who are isolated, talking about their common problems so they can unite to expose the corruption of the Housing Authority."

This powerful collection of documentation reveals many of the problems and inconsistencies within the Housing Authority, including the diversion of funds, the violations of tenants' rights and the prominent drug factor in the projects themselves. As part of an ongoing effort to give public housing tenants a voice and to raise public awareness, these four artists, along with a loose federation that includes 25 artists, activists and project residents, have also established an outreach program that will include workshops, video screenings and art shows. "We want people to realize when they drive by the projects that the people inside are not an alien form of life, and we want the people in the projects to realize that people do care," Byrne said.

The goal of the outreach program's participants is to establish communication between public housing residents and the community. For instance, local children of the Hayes, Alemany and North Beach housing projects are given the opportunity to express their feelings and opinions through art and video sessions set up by the group. The work of these young artists is included in the Capp Street exhibit.

One of the group's highest priorities, as the Capp Street show illustrates, is to move toward resident management of housing projects, which is "the only solution to the evicseration of civil rights by the housing authorities," Byrne said. If the inhabitants of the projects take charge of their premises, he foresees better maintenance, fewer vacancies, a more efficient administration of funds, drug rehabilitation programs and more recreation centers.

Byrne points to successful programs in Chicago, Washington, D.C., and Boston, among others, to show that resident management can work. "Where resident management has been achieved, crime has decreased 50 percent, employment has gone up, welfare dependency has dropped and a lifestyle has been achieved that is more human." Communication, Byrne said, is the first step in establishing a resident council that can apply directly to HUD for funds and eventually break away from the city Housing Authority. "With significant outside support and publicity, we have a strong chance of not being crushed by the Housing Authority."

To help raise funds for the outreach program, ATA hosts the video screening of Shot in the Projects at 8:30 pm on Friday, Sept. 28th. ATA is at 992 Valencia near 21st Street in San Francisco. ATA also airs a biweekly show on Cable Channel 25, Wednesdays at 2:30 pm and Thursdays at 7:30 pm, featuring public housing residents and activists. Call ATA at 824-3890 or Capp Street at 626-7747 for more information.

Love in a quarantined world: Angelo Pagan and Nadja Kennedy star in Beirut.

DESPERATE LIVES

"Beirut" portrays vitality in the face of death, while "Mensch Meier" looks at lives of quiet desperation

BEIRUT. By Alan Bowne. Directed by Bill English and produced by Genesis Theatre Company at SOMAR Theatre, SF. Plays through Oct. 28th.

MENSCH MEIER. By Franz Xavier Kroetz. Directed by Paul Hellyer at Eureka Theatre Company, SF. Runs through Oct. 14th.

By Misha Berson

THE LOCALE of Alan Bowne's 1987 futuristic play Beirut is not Lebanon, but a cordoned-off portion of Manhattan's Lower East Side. The area is called Beirut because, like parts of that luckless Middle Eastern city, it's an armed camp sealed off from the rest of the world. It's also a dumping ground for people who carry a highly contagious, very lethal, AIDS-like virus.

The quarantined world Bowne imagines, and that director-designer Bill English conjures in his convincing SOMAR Theatre production, is no hospice. The people living here tested "blood positive," were rounded up and branded and are confined to these bleak quarters indefinitely. They subsist on government-issue canned food and bottled water, and get daily skin-searches by a horny, gun-toting "legion patrol." If any signs of active illness appear, they're off to another camp — to die.

Beirut pushes its apocalyptic plague-paranoia scenario to extremes, but keeps up an emotional buzz. The streetwise, positive-negative couple at the center of the hour-long drama are Torch (Angelo Pagan), an artist consigned to a warehouse basement, and Blue (Nadja Kennedy), a young woman who defies the quarantine to join him. Torch carries the plague virus; Blue doesn't. He can't bear to contaminate her through sexual contact; she revolts against a life without sex, and refuses to return to the scared, loveless world of the "healthy."

Their tug-of-war is at times oddly reminiscent, at least conceptually, of both Sam Shepard's Cowboy Mouth and Margaret Atwood's A Handmaid's Tale. But the dialogue is a Shanley-esque patois of Italo-Queens gutter poetry, and the debate about avoiding love to live, or risking death to love, reverberates as an AIDS metaphor (Bowne died of the disease last year) and on other levels too.

The play's muddiest area is sexual politics, mucked up by a surfeit of lusty bravado. Torch worries about infecting Blue, but also mutters such fond endearments as "I could rip your tits off with my teeth." And Blue, slithering around in scanty underwear, grows downright indignant when her (suicidal) sexual demands are not quickly met.

More compelling are some of the quiet, less pumped-up moments — like when Torch envisions himself back in his old Bensonhurst neighborhood. The things he longs for — taking the N train, eating pizza, going to a ballgame — are heartbreakingly ordinary, and, without making too big a sentimental deal about it, he recognizes that they're gone forever.

The hot, horny aura of a New York summer night comes through in the Genesis Theatre production, which is splendidly outfitted with a towering, three-tiered barracks set (Blue crawls in through a high window and makes her way down a warren of metal stairs). For the most part, the actors handle both the bravado and poignancy of the situation well. Nadja Kennedy needs more variety in her role, but she meshes well with Angelo Pagan, a physically compelling and believably conflicted Torch. And while the placement of two silent, quarantined figures in rooms above Blue's is dramatically superfluous, it does add to the atmosphere of claustrophobic loneliness.

BEIRUT PORTRAYS vitality in the face of death. Mensch Meier, the Franz Xavier Kroetz drama currently at the Eureka Theatre Company, depicts a life that may as well be death.

Auto assemblyline worker Otto Meier (Frank Papia) and his housewife mate, Martha (Carla Spindt) are humans who are trying to be good, hardworking German zombies. But the orderly oppressiveness of their existence is killing them, and estranging them from their 15-year-old son, Ludwig (Richard Damon Olson).

Kroetz, translated from the German by Roger Downey, is a poet of banality who exposes the cracks and fissures underneath the smooth tarmac of Western European capitalism. In a succession of short scenes that flow very smoothly on Shevra Tait's mobile set, the Meiers listlessly eat their meals at the kitchen table, watch a royal wedding on TV, try to unwind at a beer garden and obsess over trifles. One entire scene is spent discussing whether they got fleeced out of a few marks at a restaurant, and a lovemaking session is interrupted by Otto's concern about getting back an expensive pen he lent to his boss.

What's really eating Otto alive is the crushing meaninglessness of his job, compounded by his fear of losing it. Martha, played with near-terminal astringency by Carla Spindt, has devolved into penny-counting kitchen drudge. And Ludwig, hounded and humiliated by his parents for not meeting their false standards of upward mobility, glooms around the house and utters hardly a word.

Eventually Otto erupts in frustration (at last! a vital sign), and the family scatters like beads of mercury from a smashed thermometer. Their prospects for good lives alone are not much better in this system, Mensch Meier suggests, but at least they're not in nuclear-family hell anymore.

Kroetz's look at lives of quiet desperation is deliberately flat and chilling. Not even Otto's smashing-up-the-living-room scene is played for drama — Kroetz refuses to enlarge behavior for stage effect (though he does make Martha rather sentimentally heroic in the end). His effects are all subtle and cumulative, based on a very slow accretion of understanding and sympathy. He also manages to keep you bored and fascinated at the same time — a discomfiting feat.

Paul Hellyer's staging at the Eureka could have easily accommodated more humor without altering Kroetz's intentions, but otherwise, the production is a very respectful one. All three actors give restrained, well-tuned performances. Carla Spindt's facial reactions are particularly astute — she often seems caught between a grimace and a frown — and youthful Richard Damon Olson gets a lot of mileage out of very little dialogue.

GOING PLACES

Travelling a different road.

In recent history, travel to other lands was reserved for the wealthy. Foreign lands for the majority of the population remained just that: FOREIGN. If you were lucky enough to travel, it meant staying in "tourist" settings — setting you distinctly apart from the locals.

Of course, there has always been an alternative way to travel. The wanderer in all of us wanted to visit different countries and spend some time connecting with the locals, travel for longer than two weeks AND not pay an arm and a leg for it.

Council Travel has long nurtured this quest for budget travel.

We see travel as an educational endeavor—getting your "Masters in Life". Council Travel's parent company, the Council on International Educational Exchange (CIEE) is a non-profit organization devoted to the enhancement and betterment of international travel, exchange and education.

It is Council Travel's hope, therefore, that if we bring affordable travel to our clients, they will be able to experience different cultures, enhance their understanding of other peoples, and therefore break the walls of bias and fear.

With 32 offices nationwide and 11 offices overseas, Council Travel is one of the largest budget travel organizations in America and the largest student travel organization in the United States. We've assisted millions of people with their travel plans for more than 43 years.

Council Travel specializes in student, youth and budget travel.

We offer bargain and student airfares, plus specialized travel products for the budget traveller: the International Student Identity Card, railpasses, hostel cards, student/youth tours, low priced accommodations, guidebooks and travel gear. Our experienced, well travelled staff are REAL TRAVEL COUNSELLORS. They can give you first hand advice on travelling on a budget. The style of travel they sell is the style of travel they do themselves.

Other unique programs the Council offers are the Work Abroad Program for students and the International Voluntary Service Program.

The Work Abroad program enables American students the opportunity to work abroad. The program helps more than 6,500 U.S. college and university students each year obtain permission for temporary work in Britain, Ireland, France, Germany, New Zealand, Costa Rica and Jamaica. That students must arrange their own employment gives them the opportunity to offset their travel expenses while working within a different culture.

You can find out more information on these and all other services in our Student Travel Catalog. This is a free publication available at any of our offices in the Bay Area. We'll also send you a copy of the Budget Traveller, a quarterly newsletter with articles written by clients and staff on recent travel experiences. The current issue focuses on East Africa.

So, what makes us different?

What makes our clients keep coming back? Maybe it's the philosophical beliefs. Maybe it's because we try to educate our clients on the countries they will visit. Maybe it's because we offer budget, quality travel products, whether your destination is Detroit or Denpasar. Maybe it's our great staff. Maybe it's just because we have some of the lowest fares on the market. Whatever the reason, we know one thing: we won't just fulfill your travel needs, we'll offer you a way of life.

Puppet on a love chain: Abra Rudisill plays a ballerina doll in Petrouchka.

MILESTONE FOR OAKLAND

The Oakland Ballet opens its 25th anniversary season with a challenging tribute to Mikhail Fokine

OAKLAND BALLET. At the Paramount Theater, Oakl. Friday, Sept. 14th.

MACFARLAND/WHISTLER DANCEARTCOMPANY. At the Magic Theatre, SF. Saturday, Sept. 15th.

By Rita Felciano

OAKLAND BALLET opened its 25th anniversary season with a tribute to Mikhail Fokine, who in the first decade of this century changed the look of dance by introducing the one-act ballet, insisting that dance, music and visuals all must contribute to one unified vision. Oakland could not have chosen better. All three works, Les Sylphides (1909), Petrouchka (1911) and even the by-now-faded Scheherazade (1910), are profoundly original ballets. Performing them for the first time, as Oakland did with the first two, is in itself a milestone. But there surely is no better way to look forward to another quarter of a century than by premiering works that are 80 years old and as fresh as the day they were born.

In a Fokine ballet, it isn't enough to put soloists up front — his choreography for corps is at least as important. The Oakland dancers rose to the challenge reasonably well — most successfully in the magical Petrouchka. Set in a Russian market square on Shrove Tuesday, it is the story of the sad love triangle between the knock-kneed puppet Petrouchka, who is in love with a ballerina doll who in turn favors a fierce blackamoor. Set to a gloriously snarling score by Igor Stravinsky, it's a work in which foreboding and frivolity inextricably mingle and bounce off each other. The Oakland dancers, under the tutelage of Nicolas Beriozoff, Fokine's associate for more than 20 years, did themselves proud in it.

Mario Alonzo's Petrouchka, Abra Rudisill's brittle-jointed puppet ballerina and above all, Ron Thiele's mixture of dim-witted slowness with just a touch of barbarism made for a creditable, poignant trio of interpreters. Even such minor parts as the competing street dancers (Marissa Ritter, Jeannene Fogel), the two gypsies (Cynthia Chin, Jill Taylor) and the flirting first nursemaid (Joy Gim) were well cast and finely characterized.

The other work that was new for Oakland, Les Sylphides, is a delicate and fragile piece of romantic wispiness that demands an impeccable ensemble, tight footwork and lyrical arms — a challenge for any company. After a somewhat choppy start, the Oakland dancers, including the four soloists (Abra Rudisill, Cynthia Chin, Joy Gim and Michael Lowe) did move toward a kind of fluid congruity that is promising. They may not be there yet, but they know what they're striving for.

The pseudo-orientalism of the opening Scheherazade, with its atmosphere of indolence and sensuality, would probably look dated even with dancers who are not as bony and skinny as today's generation is. It is even difficult to see how the orgy scene, the scanty costumes (Leon Bakst, after Persian miniatures) and all those writhing limbs shocked (titillated, more likely) sophisticated Parisians. Today, at its best Scheherazade looks naive, and at its worst it's offensive. What did shock was the image of the black slaves bursting forth from their cages into the arms of their white mistresses.

Thanks to Bakst's flat-colored costumes, however, the feverish orgy scene worked rather well in terms of stage design. The rotating concentric or linked circles of strongly differentiated color bands and snake lines that wound in and out of the stamping chorus, with Joral Smalle's Golden Slave whipping through the ensemble in pursuit of Joy Gim's Zobeide, looked a little like a Fauvist painting come alive. Clearly Fokine and Bakst have not spent all their time at the theater.

AVERY different evening of work by a single choreographer as presented by Clare Whistler the denuded black space of the Magic Theatre. Her program of three premieres and two earlier works, poetically entitled "Liquid Time," moved through the four solos and one duet with the quiet energy that reflects a focused mind. The dancers (Melissa C. Rolnick, Andrea Buckley, Joanna Haigood, Barbara Susco, Mercy Sidbury and Whistler herself) were uniformly excellent, the choreography individualized and clearly articulated, the music and lighting design (Joe Williams) tasteful and appropriate. It was an evening of dance that proved small is indeed beautiful.

The first half of the program contained works that probed the tension between hanging on and letting go in love relationships. In The Vanished Image, supported by a particularly felicitous sound collage by Jonathan Clarke and Whistler, Rolnick recalls caresses, looks, moments of tenderness of a past love. Cord, for Andrea Buckley and Whistler, looks at that inevitable loosening of the bond between parent and child. Buckley as the energetic and self-absorbed colt dashing out on her own and Whistler's watchfully protective but increasingly withdrawing parent balanced each other's momentum quite well. It was an idealized, yet — except for the last image — convincing portrayal of a parent-child relationship.

"Veil," one segment of Surfacing Voices, which also contains the earlier "Fragile" (Haigood) and "Whisp" (Susco), closed this evening of excellent dancing. The extraordinary Mercy Sidbury, in a Middle Eastern costume, kicked and lashed with an awe-inspiring combination of fright, anger and absolute determination against the dervish-like force that buffeted her. If we are to believe Sidbury and Whistler, feminism has hit the Muslim world with the force of a typhoon.

Bill Frisell: "All the stuff people are saying about me is frightening."

AX PIONEER

Guitarist Bill Frisell charts an adventurous course through the world of jazz

By Dan Ouellette

BILL FRISELL is a guitar genius, an ax pioneer as comfortable in a free-jazz zone, where he charts invigorating excursions into the land of dissonance, as in a straight-ahead jazz vein where bebop is the language. His jazz is at turns cerebral and joyful, mysterious and accessible, abrasive and gentle, angular and sweetly melodic. He also rocks out sonic blasts and frenzied guitar bites with Hendrix intensity, floats into heavenly pedal steel guitar-like riffs straight out of a Nashville session and concocts dreamy atmospherics that might pass for hot-tub Musak if it weren't for the ubiquitous offbeat and often jagged surprises.

In concert, Frisell is intriguing to watch. Although he's incredibly adventurous, he appears shy onstage, hunching over his guitar and often facing the other band members, seemingly forgetful of the audience. Instead of assaulting his guitar he caresses it, communicating intimately with it and coaxing an array of textures and emotions out of it. He gets it to sting on the intense pieces, works his box of delays and distortions to create both ethereal and frenetic runs and pumps a volume pedal to give it the tonality of a horn—all done in an unassuming manner that has led one writer to describe him as the Clark Kent of electric guitarists.

Frisell is just as modest when talking about his guitar-playing and composing as he is onstage. In a phone conversation from his Hoboken, New Jersey home he says, "Someday I hope to have my own world of music that people will recognize for its sound and composition." Given his distinctive guitar voicings and his unpredictable and imaginative style of writing, Frisell has already emerged at the top of the class. I remind him that he's been on the cover of Downbeat and that he placed first in the electric-guitar category in that jazz magazine's most recent critics' poll. "All the stuff people are saying about me is frightening," he says. "I mean, it's great to have all this praise, but sometimes it's distracting to hear it. If I actually start believing..."

Frisell pauses, collects his thoughts, and continues: "Ten years ago, I never even thought about making a record. Just a few years ago, no one knew who I was. I was basically doing the same thing then as I am now. When I see myself in those polls, it's strange. It's frightening."

It's even more frightening to think that Frisell almost tossed in the towel in the early '80s, when he was burned out, trying to survive the New York City scene by playing weddings, bar mitzvahs and endless club dates with friends. Originally from Baltimore and raised in Denver, Frisell has been playing music since the fourth grade, when he started out on a clarinet in his school's concert/marching band. He later switched to guitar, played in groups that covered Beatles and Stones tunes and eventually caught the jazz bug by listening to Wes Montgomery and Charlie Parker.

Frisell then headed to the Berklee School of Music in Boston for a semester as a self-confessed jazz conservative, after which he returned smugly to Colorado. While playing with jazz bands in Denver, he began to re-evaluate different musical options, which led him to re-enter Berklee in 1975 to explore diverse guitar voicings and alternatives to bebop guitar. After some gigging and composing time in Europe, Frisell moved to New York, where jazz drummer Paul Motian eventually came to his rescue.

"Paul has given me so much support," Frisell says. "My first visible gigs and my first records were with him. He was the first person who supported me 100 percent. He wanted me to be myself on the guitar rather than mold me. Anything I wanted to do with his band was OK. I still had my circle of friends that I played with, but I really blossomed with Paul."

Frisell continues to tour and record with Motian in between his frequent collaborations with other artists. He co-leads Power Tools, works with Marc Johnson in Bass Desires, joins forces with John Zorn, adds licks to the brilliant Arto Lindsay-Peter Scherer Ambitious Lovers projects, lends producer Hal Willner a hand in his diverse tribute albums (from Disney to Monk) and has contributed riffs to pieces by Paul Bley, Bob Moses, Lyle Mayes, Wayne Horvitz, Bobby Previte and Marianne Faithfull. Frisell claims he's trying to cut down on his work as a sideman, but admits it's not easy. "It's hard to say no to someone whose music you like. I have to fight to keep enough time for myself. However, working with so many different people has given me a lot of inspiration for my own compositions. I enjoy being in drastically different situations. I've learned so much from people I've played with."

A case in point is his work with composer/saxophonist John Zorn, who Frisell has been playing with since 1984. "When I first heard John's music, a lot of the basics of what he was doing went completely against my natural instincts. I had been playing with Paul and working on how to develop a small instrumental idea over a long period of time. I was thinking compositionally, with lots of wide open space. With Zorn, it's completely different. All the improvs are based on quick changes. Especially in his early game pieces like 'Track & Field' and 'Cobra,' everything is in fast motion, and you don't have time to develop anything. That shook up my whole way of thinking. It was great for me, because it added a whole other dimension to my writing and playing."

Musical boundaries dissolve when considering Frisell's music, so it comes as no surprise that when I ask him what musician he's been listening to a lot lately, he responds: "I'm completely into John Hiatt. I'm almost embarrassed to say how much I like him. I don't really know why. Maybe because I'm nostalgic for the time when I used to listen to Bob Dylan all the time. Hiatt's stuff hits me really strong. I get into the stories in his songs. I haven't told many people this. I feel like I should be saying that I've been listening to violin concertos or something."

Frisell laughs at his confession, which brings up another strong attribute of his music that is often overlooked: its humor. The jarring musical leaps, the crazy twists and turns, the squeaks and growls, the whimsical jabs and spirited cavorting on the fretboard all point to how playful Frisell can be with his guitar. Significantly, the cover art of his latest Elektra Musician album, the Downbeat-rated five-star Is That You?, features a picture of Frisell when he was just a kid. What's he doing? Laughing. About his music he says: "I'm not thinking about the humor much when I play, but it's there. With my band, it's like we're having a conversation with our instruments. If we were talking together, we'd probably all be laughing at something. It's a part of our personalities. I don't try to do something funny ahead of time, but sometimes when I play passages I hear people dying of laughter in the audience. I may actually be feeling serious, but it's great if people react in that way. There's room in music for every kind of emotion."

Bill Frisell brings his band (with cellist Hank Roberts, bass player Kermit Driscoll and drummer Joey Baron) to Yoshi's for a four-night engagement, Wed.-Sat., Oct. 3rd-6th. Call 762-BASS for tickets or 652-9200 for more information.

OPERA

Who listens to what they say? Soprano Marilyn Mims in Pagliacci.

LOVE FEST

Love was the topic at the SF Opera's opening night — at least onstage SUOR ANGELICA by Giacomo Puccini and PAGLIACCI by Ruggero Leoncavallo, conducted by Nello Santi, at the War Memorial Opera House, SF, Sunday, Sept. 16th.

By Stephen Share

IT WAS a feast of love onstage — if only onstage — at the War Memorial Opera House, as the season finally got underway with an unusual coupling of Puccini's Suor Angelica and Leoncavallo's Pagliacci, two emotion-charged short operas.

Puccini's opera, the short and unhappy story of a disgraced aristocrat forced to take holy orders, would normally be seen as part of the Trittico, or on its own. Pagliacci, of course, is typically paired with Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana. The current double bill makes sense, though, since both operas explore the broader view of love as both redeeming and destructive, rather than showing only the negative side.

Suor Angelica has the distinction of being a new production that doesn't stand out visually. Its general impression is one of austere realism, which is fine. There are a limited number of additions you can give a 17th-century convent. The real values of this production lie in the singing and conducting. Leona Mitchell in the title role has a big, wide-ranging instrument. In the beginning, her voice seems almost too vibrant for a nun doing penance: It belies a worldly passion that only seems appropriate when we realize her history as the mother of an illegitimate son who was taken from her right after his birth.

Mitchell's Angelica is utterly credible in dramatic intelligence and power.

Equally exciting is her soprano, especially rich at the top but also convincing in the lower tessitura. As for technique, Mitchell's enunciation is at times lacking.

Angelica's aunt, the Princess, as sung by Elena Obratzova, proves every bit as daunting as the character should be. Cold and unyielding in manner, Obratzova's vocal force creates an even more intimidating character. Although the role was written for a contralto, Obratzova, a mezzo-soprano, carries it off in good form.

The lighting design by Thomas Munn is handled well, especially in the final moments, when Angelica has her heavenly vision. Stars come out, and the figures of Madonna and child appear to be standing in space. Cute, but very corny.

Good points notwithstanding, Suor Angelica has never been a very popular work, and it isn't hard to see why: Few people can relate to the absence of any other than religious love. Even Angelica's maternal love — though passionate — remains an abstraction. Musically, the opera lacks the variety common to Puccini's other works (not having any male voices is surely a factor). Beyond that, the story is depressingly mawkish. At any rate, it's worth hearing every 30 or 40 years.

Pagliacci, on the other hand, has been done to excess, and while the current performance features appropriate energy and talent, it's far from being new and exciting. Jean-Pierre Ponnelle's production has worn well enough, though its disregard for the libretto is still annoying. I can live with the story being updated to include electric Christmas lights, but a dilapidated roadster replacing the donkey and wagon makes a mockery of Tonio's excuse that he has to stay and groom the donkey. But then, who listens to what the singers say?

Vladimir Atlantov, in his U.S. debut, leads the singers as Canio/Pagliaccio. A dramatic tenor in the best of traditions, Atlantov gives his all to the jealous, angry character he portrays. Vocally he is always in control of himself, even when seemingly blind with rage. His most famous aria, "Vesti la giubba," rang out with more anger than anguish, and to great effect — though some clown in the audience interrupted with a dying-bear "bravo" before Atlantov had finished. So it goes.

Another point the audience doesn't get to experience is Canio applying his makeup for the play-within-the-opera. It doesn't amount to a huge loss, but it's an unnecessary one.

Portraying Nedda, Marilyn Mims does well in creating an impression of nervousness and fear, and is appropriately languorous when envying the birds' freedom. Her vocal flights are sure; as a lover she is less convincing, but still adequate.

Silvio, Nedda's lover, is solidly conveyed by Gino Quilico. His ardent presence and good looks go far in creating his character. He also makes good in the voice department, though he isn't consistently smooth.

Matteo Manuguerra's Tonio more than suffices. He looks the part, exuding loutish energy without being made into a caricature by the makeup artists.

Both these operas benefit from the fine conducting of Nello Santi. He makes the best of the musical limitations in Suor Angelica, and with Pagliacci he conducts concisely, expressively and in league with all concerned. This marks the first time Santi has led the San Francisco Opera, and I look forward to hearing him again. ■

Singer June Tabor: Her vocal alchemy's always a revelation.

Kotoja, Freedom is What Everybody Needs (Inner Spirit Records)

With the title track getting plenty of left-on-the-dial radio play around the Bay Area, Freedom is What Everybody Needs has become the hottest local release of the summer. And if Kotoja's debut recording does not have the sublimely limber sway and seasoned-over-decades feel of the peak African pop albums from Nigeria, Zaire and South Africa, it is a superb expression of Northern California's world beat aesthetic, beautifully produced, brimming with beats and driven by a dyed-in-the-roots sensibility.

Ken Okulolo, a former member of King Sunny Ade's Africa Beats who sings, plays bass, keyboards and guitar and programs rhythm machines, has gathered around him more than a dozen African and American musicians whose credentials range from Fela's Africa 70 band to the Hieroglyphics Ensemble. Synthesizers can be a special irritant in contemporary African dance music, but Okulolo never lets them dominate on this carefully textured album. Instead, he keeps the lilting vocals (his leads and warm, grainy ensemble harmonies), the powerful horn section (Babatunde Williams, Peck Allmond, Paul Hanson and Danny Bittker), the intertwining guitars and the all-important percussion well in the forefront.

Like the exuberant sound, the lyrics — sung in Yoruba, Urhobo and English — are full of joy, hope, love and resilience. In the car, Freedom will elevate you above the petty frustrations of urban traffic; around the house, it will motivate you through the chores; at a party, it will raise the revel to frenzied heights. (Inner Spirit Records, 584 61st St., Oakl. 94609).

— Derk Richardson

stateside. Whatever form her vocal alchemy assumes, it is always a revelation. Some Other Time is a full-blown exploration of the jazz and American pop standards she has been dropping into her live shows.

Accompanied by longtime associate Huw Warren on piano and cello, with the profound Danny Thompson on bass, plus saxophonist Mark Lockheart and percussionist Bosco de Oliveira, Tabor wafts slowly through "Night and Day," "Body and Soul," "I've Got You Under My Skin," "Sophisticated Lady," "Round Midnight," "Meditation" and other ballad staples far removed from the folk-rock field. Not a jazz singer in the Billie Holiday-to-Betty Carter vein, Tabor plays little with the original melodies and never breaks into passionately inspired improvisations. Instead, she holds close to the song, transforms the words into embers and smoke and conjures a delicate wistfulness that some may read as cool, but which actually glows with an enchanting and expansive inner warmth. Any lingering doubts about a "folksinger" reaching into the jazz songbooks melt away into ten peaceful fireside reflections.

Excitement is not the issue with Tabor, and her joint venture with the terrific (and terrifically underappreciated in the U.S.) Oyster Band is not the most raucous example of contemporary British folk-rock. But while Freedom and Rain won't knock Richard Thompson, Billy Bragg or the Pogues off their respective pedestals, it is another chance to hear Tabor sing, and she cruises elegantly through songs by Thompson, Bragg and the Pogues' Shane McGowan, plus Si Kahn's "Mississippi," Lou Reed's "All Tomorrow's Parties" and traditional tunes with new Oyster arrangements. The band, a multi-instrumental quintet (guitar, mandolin, bass, drums, percussion, cello, fiddle, accordion, organ, psaltery and more played by Alan Prosser, Russel Lax, Chopper, Ian Teller and John Jones, plus the Metal Fatigue horn section), is somewhat more restrained here than on its own previous releases, concentrating on subtle shading and impeccably controlled momentum, perhaps in deference to Tabor's perfect musicality. If you're looking for a push-and-shove tussle between instruments and voice, this is not the venue. But the Oyster Band swings and Tabor sings, and that's more than enough.

Everything June Tabor sings turns into something fine and rare — gossamer, silk, silver, a dissolving mist at sunrise, a low-burning candle at midnight. Low toxicity hardcore? The Toxic Reasons hammer out intelligent noise: See Sat/29.

A selective guide to Bay Area events by Susan Gerhard

'BEST IN THE WEST' We're the hub of the western states' dance world, according to Dance Bay Area, and it's an assertion they back up with their SF Dance Festival — three days of movement mastery, including low-flying trapeze developer Terry Sandgraff's latest ritual dance, Night Visit, and Tracy Rhoades's graceful mourning dance in response to his lover's death from AIDS, Requiem, both on Sat/29. Tonight's program of Karl Schaffer's comic mockery of contemporary dance, Fad, plus works by Jennifer Kilfoil, Deborah Slater, Janice Dulak and Tandy Beal, sets the stage for the weekend's mixture of mime, clogging, meditative and experimental works. Tonight through Sun/30 at 8:30 pm, Herbst Theatre, Van Ness and McAllister, SF. $11-$13. 552-3656.

WATCH YOUR WALLET 'cause the Highwaymen are lookin' to steal what they can, though the press release proffers that "these Highwaymen steal hearts rather than gold." Following their 1989 release, Highwaymen 2, the dusty Wild West combination of Willie Nelson's wistful warbling, Johnny Cash's sturdy steamrolling plus Kris Kristofferson's and Waylon Jennings' cowboy consciousness should be a super-group show worth giving up a little silver for. 8 pm, Concord Pavilion, 2000 Kirker Pass Rd., Concord. $19.50-$23.50. 762-BASS. (Also Sat/29 at 8 pm, Shoreline Amphitheatre, Mountain View. $18.50. 762-BASS or 962-1000.)

COUNT ON THIS David Hardiman's SF All-Star big band comes through every year with its Tribute to Count Basie. This year the 19-piece band showcases greats like the Ellington, Basie, Ray Charles, Sun Ra, Thad Jones and Johnny Otis bands, accompanied by the Billie Holiday-like vocals of "Sweetie" Mitchell. 8 pm, City College Theatre, Phelan and Judson, SF. $5. 392-7469.

'SHOT IN THE PROJECTS' Strong words for toxic truth about urban public housing in SF. This evening's short films document conditions, including the harassment by authority, that goes on in the projects. 8:30 pm, Artists' Television Access, 992 Valencia, SF. $4. 824-3890.

FUN IN NYC Roger Stigliano's Fun Down There focuses on a boy from a town so small he has to row a boat to the middle of a lake to masturbate. He escapes to the Big Apple, where he comes out, comes of age and at least sees lots of "fun down there," beginning with a safe-sex rooftop party where Buddy exposes a little of his naivete. Plays through Oct. 4th at 7 and 9 pm, with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1, 3 and 5 pm, Castro Theatre, Market and Castro, SF. $6. 621-6120.

LESBIAN/GAY RADIO DAZE The sprightly crew of musicians in the SF Lesbian/Gay Chorus take the proverbial trip down memory lane, with a few minor diversions. Their show, "Radio Daze," recreates '30s and '40s radio programs, Duke Ellington, Jerome Kern and Rogers and Hart-style shows with "guest appearances" by versions of Gracie Allen, the Lone Ranger and Maxine Andrews. Tonight and Sat/29 at 8 pm, Cowell Theater, Pier 2, Fort Mason Center, Buchanan at Marina, SF. $15. 285-8608.

SPAGHETTI SKYSCRAPERS If Marin's Bay Model is just too far to travel for you, check out the mini-city made of pasta at the Anchorage Shopping Center. The Rick Hern Production Company creates a San Francisco cityscape out of rigatone, lasagne, ziti and spaghetti. Who gets to pour the sauce? Today through Sun/30, 10 am-6 pm, Fisherman's Wharf, between Jones and Leavenworth, SF.

QUEER HAPPENINGS The Montreal Police Department's alleged brutal treatment of gay Bastille Day partygoers and demonstrators this July gets Queer Nation's attention in an action at the Canadian Consulate today, Noon, 50 Fremont St. (between Market and Mission), SF. 985-7141.

FIVE WOMEN WHO CAN BELT A TUNE as well as whisper sweet sounds and give voice to abstract feelings, Sweet Honey in the Rock brings its a cappella ambrosia to Berkeley tonight. 8 pm, Zellerbach Hall, UC-Berkeley, near Telegraph and Bancroft, Berk. $16.50-$18.50. 642-9988.

TRANCE AND DANCE IN THE BAY AREA The Crystal Pistol goes Algerian with Cheb I Sabbah's masterful DJ dance music and special guests Don Cherry and the Griots of Night. Sabbah's music transcends ethnic categorization, with Algerian, Andalusian, Moroccan, Parisian and other African music influences. 10 pm, Crystal Pistol, 842 Valencia, SF.

1968 PARIS was a city of turmoil, and Chris Marker's Grin Without a Cat, a made-for-British-TV program, investigates both the Paris uprisings and government-toppling events around the world, including Che Guevara's murder, police-student confrontations in Europe and Asia and the Left's failure to respond to the "new order," according to the press release for this four-hour Cinematheque program. 7:30 pm, Eye Gallery, 1151 Mission (between Seventh and Eighth St.), SF. Free. 431-6911.

THE MARKET STREET MAESTRO Alto saxophonist Sonny Simmons, a free-jazz leader of the early '60s Coleman/Coltrane camp, has been down on his luck and performs his improvisational sounds mostly on Market Street these days. Tonight he makes a special club comeback appearance with the Global Jungle Band. 9 and 10:30 pm, Concepts Cultural Gallery, 480 Third St., Oakl. $7. 763-0682.

ON ONE of KRON's late-night news broadcasts last week, the anchors were all chuckles about the federal government's buyout of the bankrupt Mustang Ranch, a legal brothel that's about ten minutes east of Sparks, Nevada on I-80. Seems the government plans to keep it running, but there've been minor delays in starting business back up again, and the brothel workers are getting impatient. The story included footage of the "ladies" standing in the parking lot, awaiting word they could return to work (except for one relapse into "girls," the newscasters kept to "ladies," but they enunciated it in a way that stood out, letting you know that, ha-ha, these sure didn't seem like your usual type of "ladies"). There was something sinister and condescending about the way these shiny metropolitan newscasters treated this story; their amused smiles and wonder made the Mustang Ranch seem like it was in a faraway, maybe even Third World country. Yet it's only about four hours away. I think it was the suave, white-bread narration voiced over the somewhat bland (deliberately?) footage of the Nevada women that set the tone: "These people are not like us."

I guess that, since I don't watch TV news much, it's kind of shocking that these clean-cut types are the "objective" voices that supposedly represent our nation (at least they represent us on the tube, which you can't deny creates a lot of the images that people currently absorb). Think about it: You can turn the TV news on in almost any city, and the faces and voices all look the same — now isn't that a little frightening? Singer/songwriter Tony Gilkyson told me that one thing bothering him is how you can drive coast-to-coast across this country, through all sorts of towns and landscapes, yet you still get the same Top-40 songs on the radio; local stations don't play regional music anymore.

was a cry of freedom; but are these voices on radio and television really Our Music? Was that television news broadcast really representing Our Nation? Something tells me not.

Media manipulation hits the great open road: Elle magazine's fashionable fifth anniversary issue proclaims, through a series of articles and photo spreads, that Americans' fascination with the West — its myth, culture and, of course, fashion — is back. "Every 10 years or so we get tired of ourselves and go West," writes Ron Hansen in "Cowboy Dreams," an essay that's included in the issue. But, he reminds us, "Going there rarely means going there. Usually it means a fancy pair of hand-stitched boots that will be a hard penance for our feet until the heels finally go out and we toss them." At least it's an irony Elle's editors seem to be aware of.

I don't think there's anything inherently wrong with this mainstream interest in Western culture — it'll just be kind of interesting to see what direction the fascination heads in, what new twists the myth is allowed to take on this time. If you're curious about Western legends, though, there are better places than Elle to look for it. One is the Oakland Museum: On Saturday, Sept. 29th, head on down there for "Back in the Saddle Again: A Celebration of the American Cowboy." It's the first in a series of programs in conjunction with the museum's "Folk Roots, New Roots: Folklore in American Life" exhibit. Guests include poet/roper Jessie Smith; musicians Doug and Bob McCutcheon; poet Chuck Prentiss; members of the Black Cowboys Association of Oakland, who will discuss black cowboys in the American West; Hal Cannon, director of the Western Folklife Center in Salt Lake City, who'll take a look at the cowboy as American hero; and Hollywood character actor "Sunshine" Lloyd, who will talk about his experiences on the set. The program happens from noon to 5 pm, and also includes screenings of old Hollywood westerns.

Henry Kaiser dropped me a note about his show Sun/30 at the Great American Music Hall, saying that the quartet he's assembled is "the band that [he's] dreamed of having for years. This band can play anything." Membership includes guitarist/vocalist John McCain, bassist/vocalist Gary Lambert and drummer Mark McQuade. While Kaiser's The Henry Kaiser Band was responsible for reviving "Dark Star" and "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance," this one plays mostly original compositions. Starting time's 8 pm — give it a whirl.

The next night, local band Eskimo celebrates the imminent release of its debut record, Jack, with a great record-release party idea: Sell the album with the ticket. It'll cost you ten bucks to get into Klub Komotion (2779 16th St., SF) that night, but it's worth it 'cause you get a voucher to redeem for a copy of the record. (As a bonus, A Subtle Plague and Pluto are also on the bill.)

cussion Explosion, a day-long polyrhythmic celebration of both traditional and popular sounds. Music ranges from the Ladzekpo Brothers' Ewe sounds from Ghana, Togo and Benin to SF Taiko Dojo's sounds from Japan, Batucaje's Brazilian beat, the Mandingo Drummers' West African music, the Harmonics' steel drums from Trinidad and Tobago and Ankori's ritual percussion from Cuba. 1-7 pm, Lake Merritt Bandstand, Lake Merritt, Oakland. Free. 783-3962.

'LOVESEXY' It's the first of Other Cinema's three-part series, The Body: Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness, with the West Coast premiere of Bradley Eros's and Jeanne Liotta's Fungus Eroticus, a journey through the "wound-scape" of decay and rebirth. Along with safe-sex music videos, early porn and the free condoms, catch Curt McDowell's Nudes (A Sketchbook), presenting myriad sexual preferences, and Scott Bartlett's Lovemaking, on the psychedelic pleasures of the "love generation." 8:30 pm, Artists Television Access, 992 Valencia, SF. $5. 824-3890.

CRITIC'S CHOICE/Music

Sweet Honey in the Rock

The individual voices have changed over the years since Bernice Johnson Reagon founded this brilliant a cappella vocal group of African American women, but the vision of music that reaches deep into the past, nurtures the present and looks to a brighter future has been sustained. Indeed, Sweet Honey's embrace has widened, encompassing African chants, field-work songs, spirituals and gospel from the black church, rebellious folk tunes from Woody Guthrie and Leadbelly, civil rights anthems and original perspectives on current world crises. Reagon (whose daughter Toshi just released her first album, Justice) is a heroic guardian of African American folk culture, both at the Smithsonian in Washington, D.C., where Sweet Honey is based, and in the inspirational (and sign-language interpreted) songs of this immensely powerful and moving ensemble.

Children of Bali

Children in Bali attend their first musical and theatrical performances on their parents' laps; therefore, dance and music become part of their everyday lives. There are no celebrations or important occasions without their participation and attendance. The Children of Bali is an ensemble of 20 precocious 10-to-15-year-old musicians and dancers, including a 13-year-old conductor, on tour in the United States as part of a Festival of Indonesia. The group performs, for one night only, a program of narrative (including an Indonesian version of a frog-and-princess story), game-like and abstract music and dances.

Movies First Runs

A selective listing of first-run movies and complete listings of repertory-house films in the central Bay Area. Since programs are subject to last-minute revisions, call theaters to verify times and titles. Capsule reviews by Zena Jones, unless otherwise noted.

AFTER DARK, MY SWEET When former boxer, now mental institution escapee Jason Patric falls in with hard-drinking widow Rachel Ward and weird small-time con man Bruce Dern, you expect a keeps-you-off-your-balance movie. Instead, you get a monotonously low-keyed affair whose ending tosses the key away altogether. San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore, 931-9800); call for times. East Bay: Oaks (1875 Solano, Berk. 526-1836); daily at 5:50 and 10:05 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:30. Piedmont (4186 Piedmont at 41st St., Oakl. 654-2727); daily at 8 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 3:40.

AIR AMERICA Justifiably shot down as a bad action/comedy, Roger (Under Fire) Spottiswoode's film is actually a not-so-bad political satire—the *M*A*S*H* of the Vietnam War—that says more than any other about the U.S. role in assisting drug empires to keep sometimes-unpopular rulers in power in Southeast Asia. Mel Gibson and Robert Downey, Jr. are there to help it fly at the box office. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Cannery (2801 Leavenworth at Beach, 441-5560); call for times.

APOCALYPSE NOW San Francisco: Alhambra (Polk and Green, 775-2137); daily at 1:15, 4:10, 7 and 9:45.

ARACHNOPHOBIA Fifties' monster movies are funnier and scarier than ever, as director Frank Marshall weaves a fabulous fun fright from a tale of Venezuelan killer spiders invading a small California town. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Balboa (38th Ave. and Balboa, 221-8184); daily at 2:05, 5:30 and 8:50. East Bay: South Shore Cinemas (2245 Shoreline, Alameda, 521-4200); call for times. California (Kittredge at Shattuck, Berk. 848-0620); daily at 8 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 3:50.

ARIEL East Bay: Northside (1828 Euclid, Berk. 841-6000); daily at 7:30 and 9:15 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 2:15, 4 and 5:45.

CINEMA PARADISO Loving, set-in-a-Sicilian-village look at people who love movies, specifically impish little Salvatore Cascio, who learns to differentiate between reel and real life from compassionate projectionist Philippe Noiret in a movie that will long linger in your mind. San Francisco: Four Star (2200 Clement at 23rd Ave. 752-2650); daily at 7 and 9:45 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 2 and 4:30. East Bay: Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville, 420-0107); daily at 12:35, 3:05, 5:35, 8:05 and 10:35.

THE COOK, THE THIEF, HIS WIFE AND HER LOVER X-rated Grand Guignol of a movie in which we're spared no side of Thief Michael Gambon's ghoulish nature as he avenges himself on Wife Helen Mirren for her infidelity with bookish Diner Alan Howard that's food for thought, but the kind that'll make you throw up. San Francisco: Parkside (19th Ave. and Taraval, 661-1940); Fri. at 8:35; Sat.-Sun. at 3:35 and 8:05.

DARKMAN Filled with incredibly brutal, prolonged violence, the film nevertheless manages to evoke the Phantom of the Opera, Batman and be clever besides as scientist Liam Neeson's blinded and left for dead by goons, but comes back to even the score in a most unusual manner. San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore, 931-9800); call for times. Balboa (38th Ave. and Balboa, 221-8184); daily at 12:30, 3:50, 7:15 and 10:40. East Bay: California (Kittredge at Shattuck, Berk. 848-0620); daily at 8:15 matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:20 and 4:45. Piedmont (4186 Piedmont at 41st St., Oakl. 654-2727); daily at 6 and 10:10 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:40.

DEATH WARRANT Mostly a showcase for Jean-Claude Van Damme's martial arts skills, the film's so confusing you'll have to marshal all your thinking arts to follow the plot as he poses as an undercover cop assigned to find the killer creating havoc in a prison. East Bay: Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990); call for times. California (Kittredge at Shattuck, Berk. 848-0620); daily at 6:30 and 10 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 3:05. Rockridge Showcase West (293 Whitmore, near 45th St. and Broadway, Oakl. 658-2285); daily at 7:15 and 9:15 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:15, 3:15 and 5:15.

DICK TRACY It's brilliant style all the way, if not too much else, but that's enough to give Warren Beatty's movie a delightful comic-book look that makes the gangsters' inches-deep makeup just right (and Al Pacino a star), as nightclub floozie Madonna tries to pry Tracy away from Glenn Headly's Tess Truehart, and style wins out all the way. San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore, 931-9800); call for times. East Bay: California (Kittredge at Shattuck, Berk. 848-0620); daily at 5:50 and 9:55 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:40.

DIE HARD 2: DIE HARDER Bruce Willis takes the "dull" out of Dulles in this Airport '90, which jokes about its resemblance to its predecessor, but doesn't mess with a successful formula. It's silly, stupid, obvious and ridiculous, but it starts in high gear and never lets up. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Alexandria (5400 Geary at 18th Ave. 752-5100); daily at 12:30, 5 and 9:45. Cannery (2801 Leavenworth at Beach, 441-5560); call for times. East Bay: Albany (1115 Solano, Albany, 524-5656); daily at 8:10 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 3:50.

DREAMS San Francisco: Clay (2261 Fillmore at Clay, 346-1123); daily at noon, 2:30, 5, 7:30 and 10. East Bay: Grand Lake (3200 Grand, Oakl. 452-3556); daily at 1:30, 4, 6:45 and 9:30. ACT (2128 Center at Shattuck, Berk. 548-7200); daily at 7:20 and 9:45 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 12:10, 2:30 and 4:55.

FLATLINERS Five medical students, headed by manipulative Kiefer Sutherland, are on a crash course to prove there's life after death, but all that's not nearly so menacing as director Joel Schumacher's ceaseless manipulation of our senses as he changes beauty to something sinister, slits open cadavers to reveal bloody organs, and tinges everything with the bizarre and vaguely obscure, and a lurking, indefinable horror. San Francisco: Presidio (Chestnut near Scott, 922-1318); call for times. East Bay: Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville, 420-0107); daily at 12:30, 2:50, 5:15, 8 and 10:30. UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487); call for times.

FRANKENHOOKER Frank (Basket Case 1 and 2) Henerlotter's purple-and-black comedy gives new meaning to the term "ensemble piece." Some will find it offensive, some romantic; if you're the type to consider going to a midnight movie in the first place, you'll probably find it hilarious. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Roxie Cinema (3117 16th St. 863-1087); Sat. at midnight.

THE FRESHMAN Marlon Brando and Matthew Broderick are marvelous as a N.Y. crook and his protege (after Broderick's been ripped off at the airport en route for film school and has been offered a lucrative scam of his own by Brando.) It's clever, funny, hilarious, tightly scripted, and should freshen up your entire summer. San Francisco: Galaxy (1285 Sutter at Van Ness, 474-8700); call for times.

FUNNY ABOUT LOVE San Francisco: Regency I (1320 Van Ness at Sutter, 885-6773); daily at 1:30, 3:40, 5:50, 8 and 10:10. East Bay: Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990); call for times. Shattuck Cinemas (2230 Shattuck, Berk. 644-3370); daily at 1, 1:30, 3:30, 5, 5:30, 7:30, 9 and 9:30. Piedmont (4186 Piedmont at 41st St., Oakl. 654-2727); daily at 7:30 and 9:30 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:30, 3:30 and 5:30.

GHOST Patrick Swayze gets murdered but his invisible ghost hangs around for the funeral in a movie that has everything going for it, every mood imaginable, and Whoopi Goldberg in her best role in years as a fake medium who's amazed to find she's the only person who can hear Swayze. San Francisco: Regency II (1268 Sutter at Van Ness. 776-8054): daily at noon, 2:40, 5:10, 7:50 and 10:40. East Bay: Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): call for times. Piedmont (4186 Piedmont at 41st St., Oakl. 654-2727): daily at 7:15 and 9:45 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at noon, 2:25 and 4:45. Shattuck Cinemas (2230 Shattuck, Berk. 644-3370): daily at noon, 12:30, 2:20, 2:50, 4:45, 5:20, 7:15, 7:45, 9:40 and 10:15.

GOOD FELLAS If you've ever wondered what life inside the Mafia's like, Ray Liotta, Lorraine Bracco, Robert DeNiro and Paul Sorvino will show you, and make Martin Scorsese's film infinitely more than just a film about gangsters. San Francisco: Coronet (3575 Geary at Arguello. 752-4400): daily at 12:45, 3:45, 7 and 10:15. Stonestown (19th Ave. and Winston. 221-8182): call for times. East Bay: Grand Lake (3200 Grand, Oakl. 452-3556): daily at 12:30, 3:30, 6:30 and 9:45. Shattuck Cinemas (2230 Shattuck, Berk. 644-3370): daily at 12:45, 1:15, 3:45, 4:15, 6:45, 7:15, 9:45 and 10:15.

HARDWARE Would-be futuristic film in which Stacey Davis is slashed, shot, thrown through a plate glass window and survives without a scratch, and the action goes downhill from there, the message being, never repair a dismembered android. San Francisco: Alexandria (5400 Geary at 18th Ave. 752-5100): daily at 1:15, 3:15, 5:15, 7:15 and 9:15. East Bay: Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): call for times. UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): daily at 1:45, 3:45, 5:45, 7:40 and 9:45. Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107): call for times.

HENRY V Kenneth Branagh's version's so different from Laurence Olivier's that comparisons are difficult, but it's brilliantly acted by a superb British cast, its darkness lightened by a hilarious scene between two women and should be judged entirely on its own merits. San Francisco: Opera Plaza (Van Ness and Golden Gate. 771-0102): daily at 7:05 and 9:35 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:50 and 4:20.

I COME IN PEACE San Francisco: Alexandria (5400 Geary at 18th Ave. 752-5100): daily at 1, 3:15, 5:30, 7:45 and 10. Empire (85 West Portal at Vicente. 661-2539): call for times. East Bay: Rockridge Showcase West (293 Whitmore, near 45th St. and Broadway, Oakl. 658-2285): daily at 6:45 and 8:45 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 12:45, 2:45 and 4:45. Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): call for times. California (Kittredge at Shattuck, Berk. 848-0620): daily at 7:30 and 9:30 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:30, 3:30 and 5:30.

JESUS OF MONTREAL Jesus look-alike actor Lothaire Bluteau's been hired to direct an annual Montreal passion play. But his very talented cast isn't what the church had in mind, whereupon life begins to imitate the Christ story with fascinating results all the way around. San Francisco: Opera Plaza (Van Ness and Golden Gate. 771-0102): daily at 7:15 and 9:30 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 12:25, 2:40 and 4:55.

LANDSCAPE IN THE MIST Moving story of two illegitimate youngsters, maternal 11-year-old Tania Palaolou and her irresistible little five-year-old brother Michaelis Zeke, who've never seen their father and leave Athens to look for him, that covers almost every emotion and makes it impossible for audiences to remain unmoved. San Francisco: Roxie Cinema (3117 16th St. 863-1087): daily at 7 and 9 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 2 and 4:30.

LIFE IS CHEAP, BUT TOILET PAPER IS EXPENSIVE Wayne Wang's latest film is by far his most striking visually as SF Asian American Spenser Nakasako couriers a briefcase to Hong Kong to get a free trip, but meets many unexpected people and impasses along the way, which makes the movie interesting, but with an unclear message. San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore. 931-9800): call for times.

MAY FOOLS Louis Malle's film's set against the May '68 mini-revolution that is only a backdrop for the goings-on in a far-from-Paris failed wine estate, in which Michel Piccoli's outstanding, closely followed by Miou-Miou and Harriet Walter in a movie that puts the "vive" back in "la France." San Francisco: Bridge (3010 Geary at Blake. 751-3212): daily at 7:20 and 9:40 with matinees Sat.-Sun. and Wed. at 12:30, 2:45 and 5. East Bay: ACT (2128 Center at Shattuck, Berk. 548-7200): daily at 7:20 and 9:30 with matinees Sat.-Sun. 1, 3:05 and 5:10.

METROPOLITAN Debuting director Whit Stillman examines New York's debutante scene like a WASP Woody Allen, and introduces a young cast that should become known as the "Whit Pack" when they reach deserved stardom. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore. 931-9800): call for times. East Bay: Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107): call for times. UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): call for times.

MO' BETTER BLUES Spike Lee's movie has quite a bit going for it which unfortunately doesn't include a focal point. Denzel Washington's a dedicated-to-his-music trumpeter, which mostly drives his lady friends up the wall, the jazz musicians give good banter and music but little perception of them, and although he's fine as a compulsive gambler of

Jim Thompson meets Stanley Kubrick

The merits of his earlier and later films are debatable, but in between, Stanley Kubrick made Paths of Glory (1957), Dr. Strangelove (1964), 2001: A Space Odyssey (1968) and A Clockwork Orange (1971), and that's three more masterpieces than Orson Welles. Paths of Glory, perhaps the most bitter antiwar film of all time, boasts one of Kirk Douglas's best performances. Kubrick wrote the script with noir novelist Jim Thompson. They had also collaborated on the interesting but often overrated 1956 caper film The Killing, which is the first indication that, because Kubrick is so meticulous in his detail, he might have been a great criminal himself. The Pacific Film Archive is showing the films together as part of a tribute to Thompson, whose novels have translated to the screen with mixed results, including the recent, dreadful After Dark, My Sweet.

—Steve Warren

■ The Killing at 7:30 pm, Paths of Glory at 9:10 pm. Sat/29 at the Pacific Film Archive, 2625 Durant, Berk. $5 per feature; $6 for both. 642-1412.

a band manager, Lee adds little to the what's-it-all-about plot. San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore. 931-9800): call for times. East Bay: Shattuck Cinemas (2230 Shattuck, Berk. 644-3370): daily at 12:15, 2:40, 5:20, 7:50 and 10:20.

MY BLUE HEAVEN Rick Moranis is sensational, Steve Martin deplorable, in a cute TV sketch that goes on 80 minutes too long. Martin's caricature of a mobster — the kind of guy who, when he wears sharkskin, looks naked — is too phony for a feature film. If this were a screen test, he wouldn't get the part. (Steve Warren) San Francisco: Alexandria (5400 Geary at 18th Ave. 752-5100): daily at 3 and 7:30. East Bay: Albany (1115 Solano, Albany. 524-5656): daily at 6 and 10:10 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 2.

NARROW MARGIN San Francisco: Galaxy (1285 Sutter at Van Ness. 474-8700): call for times. Empire (85 West Portal at Vicente. 661-2539): call for times. East Bay: Rockridge Showcase West (293 Whitmore, near 45th St. and Broadway, Oakl. 658-2285): daily at 7 and 9 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1, 3 and 5. UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): call for times. Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): call for times. Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107): call for times.

PACIFIC HEIGHTS San Francisco: Galaxy (1285 Sutter at Van Ness. 474-8700): call for times. Empire (85 West Portal at Vicente. 661-2539): call for times. East Bay: Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107): call for times. Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): call for times. UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): call for times.

POSTCARDS FROM THE EDGE Marvelously acted, written and directed story of addict Meryl Streep estranged from her alcoholic mother Shirley MacLaine, and what happens when circumstances force the two to live together that no aspiring actor should miss. San Francisco: Northpoint (Powell at Bay. 989-6060): daily at noon, 2:30, 4:45, 7:30 and 10. East Bay: Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): call for times. UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): daily at 1:45, 3:45, 6, 8 and 10:15. Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107): daily at 1:30, 3:40, 5:50, 8 and 10:10.

PRESUMED INNOCENT There's almost no one to like in this intentionally complicated movie about gorgeous lawyer Greta Scacchi who seems to have slept with most of the prosecuting cast and is murdered, leaving married-to-Bonnie-Bedelia prosecutor Harrison Ford bereft. The acting's superb; you'll be talking about this movie for a long time. San Francisco: Metro (Union and Webster. 931-1685): daily at 1:15, 4, 6:45 and 9:30. Stonestown (19th Ave. and Winston. 221-8182): daily at 2, 4:30, 7, 9:30 and 11:30. East Bay: Grand Lake (3200 Grand, Oakl. 452-3556): daily at 1:40, 4:15, 7 and 10. Berkeley (2425 Shattuck at Haste, Berk. 848-4300): daily at 7:15 and 9:45 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at noon, 2:20 and 4:40.

PRETTY WOMAN Corporate mogul Richard Gere wants the services of $100-an-hour hooker Julia Roberts for one week, and how it all works out makes for a highly entertaining come-uppance of look-downers-on among other little gems in which Gere's very good and Roberts a dramatic delight. San Francisco: Opera Plaza (Van Ness and Golden Gate. 771-0102): daily at 7:20 and 9:40 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 12:40, 2:50 and 5. East Bay: Oaks (1875 Solano, Berk. 526-1836): daily at 8 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 3:50. South Shore Cinemas (2245 Shoreline, Alameda. 521-4200): call for times.

PUMP UP THE VOLUME More than any teen film in recent memory, this one takes you inside the troubled teen persona, via Christian Slater's almost one-teen-show performance, as the shy, lonely honor student who, via pirate radio, becomes a phantom cult hero DJ at night, and does his bit to change the world. San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore. 931-9800): call for times. East Bay: UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): call for times.

QUICK CHANGE San Francisco: Balboa (38th Ave. and Balboa. 221-8184): daily at 3:15, 7:05 and 10:50.

IN THE SHADOW OF THE RAVEN San Francisco: Opera Plaza (Van Ness and Golden Gate. 771-0102): daily at 7:10 and 9:20 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 12:45, 2:45 and 4:50. East Bay: Fine Arts (Shattuck at Haste, Berk. 848-2038): daily at 7:30 and 9:40 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1, 3:10 and 5:20.

TEXASVILLE San Francisco: Cinema 21 (2141 Chestnut at Steiner. 921-6720): call for times. East Bay: Emery Bay (6330 Christie, Emeryville. 420-0107): call for times. Century (8201 Oakport, Oakl. 562-9990): call for times. UA (2274 Shattuck, Berk. 843-1487): call for times.

TIE ME UP, TIE ME DOWN Take 23-year-old mental institution patient Antonio Banderas, now declared sane, his search for porn movie queen Victoria Abril to be his bride and her adamant refusal so that he has to tie her up in order to tie her down, and you have a very lively, delightfully acted movie that'll string you along in a way you're bound to find entertaining. San Francisco: Parkside (19th Ave. and Taraval. 661-1940): Fri. at 6:50; Sat.-Sun. at 1:30, 6 and 10:20.

TORN APART San Francisco: Vogue (Sacramento and Presidio. 221-8183): daily at 5:30, 7:30 and 9:30 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:30 and 3:30. The 22nd International Tournee of Animation One of the best yet, with 18 films from 12 countries providing enough animation to satisfy almost every taste, and a variety of subjects wide enough to guarantee 110 minutes of absorbing interest. San Francisco: Gateway (Jackson at Battery. 421-3353): daily at 7 and 9:30 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 2 and 4:30. East Bay: Northside (1828 Euclid, Berk. 841-6000): daily at 7 and 9:30 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 2 and 4:30.

TWO JAKES Of course you saw Chinatown, but it won't help much in sorting out this muddle that is Jack Nicholson's sequel as the camera cuts confusingly hither and yon, Meg Tilly and Madeline Stowe seem to change with what happens to them, and the movie proves that two Jakes is one too many. San Francisco: Balboa (38th Ave. and Balboa. 221-8184): daily at 1, 4:45 and 8:35.

WHITE HUNTER, BLACK HEART This Clint Eastwood's version of what happened when John Huston and Peter Viertel went to Africa to work on "The African Queen" in which the dialogue's pretty good, but Eastwood's so busy being Huston and not quite succeeding that the rest of the movie tends to go to pot. San Francisco: Galaxy (1285 Sutter at Van Ness. 474-8700): call for times. East Bay: Grand Lake (3200 Grand, Oakl. 452-3556): daily at 12:40, 3:10, 5:30, 8 and 10:20. Oaks (1875 Solano, Berk. 526-1836): daily at 7:15 and 9:30 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 12:30, 2:45 and 5. Orinda (4 Orinda Theater Square, Orinda. 254-9060): daily at 7 and 9:20 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 2 and 4:30.

WILD AT HEART Nicolas Cage succeeds in making the film very funny as he heads south with lover Laura Dern to escape her manic mother Diane Ladd, who'll do anything to destroy their relationship, but the censors have cut out so much essential Lynchness, this may not be the movie you've been waiting for. San Francisco: Kabuki 8 (Post at Fillmore. 931-9800): call for times. East Bay: Shattuck Cinemas (2230 Shattuck, Berk. 644-3370):

YOUNG GUNS 2 Not only have Billy the Kid (Emilio Estevez), longer-haired with less dialogue Lou Diamond Phillips and now family man Kiefer Sutherland aged a lot in two years, they're no longer together at the film's core, which ruins its rationale and makes it a very valid reason for not resurrecting the Western. East Bay: Albany (1115 Solano, Albany, 524-5656); daily at 6:05 and 10:20 with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 1:45.

'Ribbons of Dreams, 1967-1975'

Concerns of yesterday support those of today as Baylaw, a non-profit organization assisting victims of domestic violence, raises money by showing San Francisco State University student films — and one by then-professor James Broughton — from a turbulent period. Political activism is reflected in George Csicsery's Let's Get It Over With, which juxtaposes presidential bullshit with news-reality to ironic effect. Broughton celebrates sexual freedom in The Bed; hippie weddings are shown in Patricia Judice's FairyDust and Yasha Aginsky's Bernal Blues; womanpower takes different shapes in Marge Alette's Experience of One Woman's Life, Barbara Hammer's I Was/ Am and, possibly the most interesting of the lot, Karen Holmes' You, Mother, which explores the radical concept that motherhood is an option, not a given. Some of the techniques and the subjects may be embarrassing in retrospect, but students are supposed to make mistakes, and they captured some classic moments without considering their future nostalgia value.

— Steve Warren

■ "Ribbons of Dreams, 1967-1975." Wed/3, reception at 6:30 pm, films at 7:30 pm. Kabuki, Post at Fillmore, SF. $10. 681-4850.

GRACE UNDER PRESSURE Grace, an out-of-work New York actress, suddenly discovers her breasts are secret weapons: They tell her what to do when the going gets tough and zap unwelcome gropers and unworthy suitors more effectively than a can of mace. Sound outlandish? You bet. But this bouncy feminist fable strikes back at misogyny with such good humored zaniness, it defies you not to love it. Writer-actor Grace Walcott, a sort of fizzy hybrid of Little Bo Peep and Bette Midler, proves that feminists know how to dish out a joke as well as take one. With her sidekick Merry Ross, she converts fear and loathing into antic, even lusty comedy. (Misha Berson) Plays Fri-Sat. at 9 pm. Extended through Oct. 6. Chi Chi Club, 440 Broadway, SF. $12. 392-6213.

HOTEL EUROPA Tom Kelly's scandalous comedy, set in a seedy London hotel. Plays Thurs.-Sat. at 8 pm. Through Oct. 6. EX! Theatre, 366 Eddy, SF. $8-$10. 673-3847.

ELECTION DAY There's a quick, if not always consistent, wit at work in David Schemler's new romantic comedy, about a shleppey small town lawyer who pursues a college philosophy professor by convincing her to run for mayor. The jams this odd couple get stuck in during the mayoral campaign are preposterous but often amusing, and lead actors Ken Sonkin and Dana Lynn Smith make a most agreeable pair. In essence, though, it's sitcom material — heavier on one-liners than on insights into the vagaries of modern love. (Misha Berson) Plays Fri-Sat. at 8 pm, Sun. at 3 pm. Through Oct. 7. Zephyr Theater complex, 25 Van Ness near Market, SF. $10. 861-6895.

ROY Joel Enzana's play looks at McCarthy cohort Roy Cohn as he dies of AIDS. Plays Wed.-Sun. at 8 pm. Through Oct. 7. Theatre Rhinoceros, 2926 16th St., SF. $9-$15. 861-5079.

AMERICAN BUFFALO Citadel Theatre presents this David Mamet play. Plays Thurs.-Sun. at 8 pm. Extended through Oct. 14. The Folclom, 475 Haight, SF. $7. 621-4810.

BUDDY...THE BUDDY HOLLY STORY This biographical about the late, great Buddy Holly comes off as a setup for the overblown, Las Vegas-style rock'n'roll revival concert it ends up with. The show's very ingratiating star, Paul Hippis, is a bona fide rocker who looks enough like Buddy (with a touch of Elvis Costello), and sounds enough like him, too — even if his falsetto doesn't quite extend to those feathery high notes in "Every Day" and other Holly classics. But the '50s nostalgia is poured on very thick (there's even an unadorned version of the national anthem sung by a Midwest beauty queen), and the pedestrian script by Alan Janes makes you wince a lot. It's in the gee-whizz and aw-shucks school of dialogue, and reveals the bare minimum about the guy and the roots of his music. No complaints, though, about the two-dozen Holly tunes in the score: They're melodic gems that just sound better (and make Paul McCartney richer) every year. (Misha Berson) Plays Tues.-Sat. at 8 pm, and Wed., Sat. and Sun. at 2 pm. Through Oct. 14. Golden Gate Theatre, Golden Gate and Market, SF. $10-$42. 243-9001.

LEMON SKY Frances Lee McCain stars in this production of the Lanford Wilson play. Plays Wed.-Sat. at 8 pm, Sun. at 2 pm and 7 pm. Through Oct. 14. Marin Theatre Company, 397 Miller, Mill Valley. $11-$18. 388-5208.

MENSCH MEIER Franz Xaver Kroetz's play traces the disintegration of a German working-class family. Plays Wed.-Sat. at 8 pm, Sun. at 2 pm. Through Oct. 14. Eureka Theatre, 2730 16th St., SF. $15-$19. 558-9898.

P.S. YOUR CAT IS DEAD Glass Eye Productions presents this James Kirkwood tale of two chronic losers. Plays Thurs.-Sat. at 8 pm, Sun. at 7:30 pm. Through Oct. 14. Theatre Upstairs, 1624 California at Polk, SF. $12. 621-7933.

TWELFTH NIGHT The Berkeley Shakespeare Festival presents this comedy. Plays Wed.-Sat. at 8 pm, with matinees Wed., Sat.-Sun. at 2 pm, plus selected additional performances. Through Oct. 14. Julia Morgan Theatre, 2640 College, Berk. $10-$21. 525-8844.

YANKEE DAWG YOU DIE Philip Kan Gotanda's play looks at the barriers facing Asian American actors. Plays Wed.-Sat. at 8 pm, Sun. at 3 pm. Through Oct. 14. Asian American Theater Center, 403 Arguello (at Clement), SF. $13-$15. 751-2600.

SAVAGE WILDS, PT. II Ishmael Reed's black comedy is based on a mayor's sex and drug scandal. Plays Fri.-Sat. at 8 pm, Sun. at 3:30 pm. Extended through Oct. 14. BMT Theater, 3629 San Pablo at 37th St., Emeryville. Call for price. 654-6172.

OKAL'S MAGIC This evening of theater features Okal the Master Magician. Plays Thurs. Sat. at 7:30 pm. Through Oct. 21. Cannery Theater, 2801 Leavenworth at Beach, SF. $10; $6 children under 12. 441-5560.

PATIENCE The Lamplighters present this Gilbert & Sullivan comic opera. Plays Fri.-Sat. at 8:30 pm, Sun. at 2:30 pm. Through Oct. 21. Presentation Theater, 2350 Turk, SF. $11-$19. 752-7755.

FUENTE OVEJUNA In Lope de Vega's 17th-century comedy/drama, an entire Spanish village rebels against its oppressive ruler and shares the blame equally. Adrian Mitchell's crisp, accessible translation invests this tale of abused power and slow-boiling revolt with modern resonance. That could have been underscored more in Sharon Ott's staging, but in most ways this is a captivating production. Graced with a strong multiracial cast, it has an attractive Iberian setting designed by Kate Edmunds, vivid costumes from Deborah Dryden and just the right amount of pizante flamenco music and movement. (Misha Berson) Plays Tues.-Sat. at 8 pm and Sun. at 2 and 7 pm, with selected Thurs. and Sat. matinees. Through Oct. 25. Berkeley Repertory Theatre, 2025 Addison, Berk. $20-$27. 845-4700.

BEIRUT Alan Bowne's drama looks at two lovers in a New York City concentration camp for plague victims. Plays Thurs.-Sun. at 8 pm. Through Oct. 28. SOMAR Theatre, 934 Brannan, SF. $10. 391-8778.

THE CARETAKER The 1960 Pinter play where an adopted tramp becomes the object of a power struggle between two alienated brothers. Plays Fri.-Sun. at 8 pm. Through Oct. 28. Phoenix Theatre, 301 Eighth St., SF. $10-$12. 285-7486.

Plays Tues.-Sat. at 8 pm with matinees Wed. and Sat.-Sun. at 2 pm. Through Nov. 4. Marines Memorial Theatre, Sutter at Mason, SF. $22-$34. 474-3800.

BAR NONE A comedy-mystery that starts off like the senior play at Harvey Milk High School turns into a laugh riot when the audience gets into the investigation in the second act. It ain't Art, despite some artful performances, but the long-running hit's a crowd-pleaser. (Steve Warren) Plays Wed.-Fri. at 8 pm, Sat. at 7 and 9:30 pm and Sun. at 2 pm. Open-ended. Mason Street Theatre, 340 Mason, SF. $18-$20. 861-6895.

MURDER MYSTERY WEEKEND This audience participation "Whodunit" by Keith O'Leary and Margo Morrison puts the audience at odds with incognito actors in solving a murder mystery during dinner. Plays Sat. at 7 pm. Open-ended. Charley's Cafe, Fisherman's Wharf, Beach and Jones, SF. $65. (800) 327-3862.

Closing

BEN-HUR Thick Description presents Thomas M. Disch's adaptation of this war tale. Plays Thurs.-Sun. at 8:30 pm. Through Sept. 30. Mission Cultural Center, 2868 Mission, SF. $10; pay what you can on Thursdays. 863-7058 or 821-1155.

CURSE OF THE WEREWOLF A perfectly silly musical spoof, and a lot of fun if you're in the right mood. Ken Hill's book has all the standard horror movie ingredients: a veddy British family on holiday in the '20s, a cobweb-filled castle set within a gloomy forest, a mad German scientist, a pack of howling wolves and werewolves. The story is actually no big hairy deal, and it goes on too long. But Michael Smuin has staged it with such winking charm, and infused it with so many dances and clever bits of business (a Groucho-Margaret Dumont rose-in-teeth tango, a pastoral Disneyesque love duet, a gruesome transformation of man into beast) that it overcomes your resistance. It helps that the winning actors, many of them on hiatus from ACT, manage to carry on with blithe comic verve, while not taking a minute of it too seriously. Other pluses: Rick Goodwin's imposing set, Beaver Bauer's splashy period costumes and a thriller-diller lighting design by Sara Linnie Slocum. (Misha Berson) Plays Tues.-Fri. at 8 pm, Sat. at 8:30 pm, Sun. at 7:30 pm, with matinees Sat.-Sun. at 2:30 pm. Extended through Sept. 30. Theatre on the Square, 450 Post, SF. $22-$34. 433-9500.

DOCTOR DOOLITTLE Young Performers Theatre presents this Hugh Lofting play. Plays Sat. at 1 and 3 pm and Sun. at 1 pm. Through Sept. 30. Young Performers Theatre, Building C, room 300, Fort Mason Center, Buchanan at Marina, SF. $4-$6. 346-5550.

EAST Playwright Steven Berkoff blends Shakespearean-style verse and rough Cockney slang to voice the rage of young and old East Londoners in Thatcher's England. The fine young actors in this low-budget production deliver Berkoff's jumble of slum poetry with great panache, and their juicy physical moves bring it all back home. A violent, profane piece of work, but for the right reasons. (Misha Berson) Plays Thurs.-Sat. at 8 pm, Sun. at 7 pm. Extended through Sept. 30. On Broadway Theatre, 435 Broadway, SF. $12-$15. 434-1528.

IMPATIENS Octavio Solis's new drama is an allegorical tea party set in Baja, and it's stubbornly obscure. A hunchbacked hostess entertains the clients of her prostitute sister, while symbols abound, dreams get recounted and mysterious sexual games are played out. Solis displays a flair for words, but Jean Genet he's not — his script keeps drowning in overly rich linguistic juices, and choking on self-conscious surrealism. Directed by Mary Forcade, with Anne Galjour, Chris Brophy and Solis himself as a barren doctor who carts around a briefcase of placenta (don't ask.) (Misha Berson) Plays Thurs.-Sat. at 8 pm, Sun. at 2 pm. Through Sept. 30. Intersection for the Arts, 446 Valencia, SF. $8-$10. 626-3311.

ITALIAN AMERICAN RECONCILIATION John Patrick Shanley's fable for contemporary romantics. Plays Thurs.-Sun. at 8 pm. Extended through Sept. 30. Actor's Theatre, 533 Sutter, SF. $10. 296-9179.

RICHARD III The SF Shakespeare Festival presents this piece. Plays Wed.-Sun. at 1:30 pm. Through Sept. 30. Liberty Meadow Stage (Arguello and JFK), Golden Gate Park, SF. Free. 221-0642.

UND GRETEL Henry and Greta, the college-aged Hansel and Gretel in this updated "fable" by talented local playwright David Barth, come to Manhattan and camp out in the tiny apartment of a mysterious older couple. At random moments over the next 2 1/2 hours, there are glimmers here of a sardonic drama about erotic ambivalence and the failure of one generation to guide another. But the bulk of this misguided epic is devoted to the kind of snail's pace hyper-realism that went out with early performance art. The actors take real baths and showers, cook and eat a fish dinner, chug Cokes and smoke cigarettes, but unfortunately have little of interest to say to each other or, presumably, to us. (Misha Berson) Plays Tues.-Sat. at 8 pm, with special performances Sat./22 at 6 and 9:30 pm. Through Sept. 30. ACT Playroom Theatre, 450 Geary, SF. $9-$10. 567-6076.

SHATTERED SECRETS Transformation Theatre re-opens this drama of seven incest survivors grappling for understanding. Plays Mon. at 8 pm. Through Oct. 1. Golden Gate Lutheran Church, 601 Dolores (at 19th St.), SF. $12. 236-4383.

RELATIONSHIP ADVERTISERS/READERS

TO PLACE YOUR RELATIONSHIP AD: Call Bay Guardian Classifieds At 255-7600 and charge it to any major credit card, or mail in your ad and payment with the Classified Coupon. To maximize the number of responses to your ad you will want to take advantage of PERSON-TO-

PERSONALS. The Guardian's new Relationship Reply Line. It's the state-of-the-art in personal messaging systems... and it's FREE to Guardian Relationship Advertisers. PERSON-TO-PERSONALS gives you the opportunity to say a little more about yourself than in your printed ad, and it makes it easier for readers to respond. HOW IT WORKS:

In addition to your ad in the paper, you will automatically be assigned a voicemail box number, with which you can record a 60-second outgoing message at no extra charge. Just call 291-8705 from a touch-tone phone, listen to the clear, step-by-step instructions, and record your greeting. You can hear your message played back before you save it, or you can change it and try again. Your message will go on-line within 24 hours (after it has been approved). It's best to record your message as soon as possible since we start receiving replies on our "browse" option even before your ad appears in print!

TO HEAR REPLIES TO YOUR AD AND VOICEMAIL MESSAGE: Call 291-8705 at no charge. Follow the instructions and listen to your replies as many times as you wish. When you hang up, your replies will be erased. If you decide to change your greeting, you'll have to wait another 24 hours before the new message appears on the system (but while you're waiting you will still be able to receive replies with the system message, which gives out only your box number).

Rock Solid Emotionally Driven

You understand situations so well, yet it's hard to put into words. When you get into an intense conversation it can take hours; afterwards, you feel so satisfied having communicated to the other person through words. But you still know that the best things can't be said with words. You're self-assured, assertive, confident, and in control. But you wish a man would sweep you off your feet and serenade you by giving you a dozen sterling roses one at a time tied with a note stating why he loves you. He'll toss them through your bedroom window on a Sunday morning just after you've awakened, and you don't mind accepting them just the way you look. The security of a business, a home with the city view, and a BMW are necessary. But what you live for is the intensity of life, driven by a passion to explore human emotions and to express the soul joyfully. I'm Chinese-American, entrepreneur, 31, 5'10", 180, handsome, athletic, fit, with a good sense of humor and am seeking a special woman for a long-term relationship. Is There...?

one attractive man in this city, who is sure of his masculinity, seeking another man equally assured of his; honest, serious minded, independent, dependable, adventurous, perceptive, strongly believes his private sexual preferences are not items for basic topics of idle conversation, but are just that, "private."
